TRIALS OF PHYSICIANS. A Doctor Talks of the Difficulties Encountered in the Practice of His Profession. "The first five years are the darkest in a young doctor's life," said a well known physician. "It does not matter how nicely he is getting on, he is sure to have had his experiences to high. A general rule is always to think a little better than he is. Leaving the simple purer character cases out of the question altogether, I have always thought myself lucky if I could get a half of my accounts. While a reputable doctor looks upon advertising in a general way as something tabooed, many of us, I doubt not, in our young days have resorted to driving rapidly through various streets in the middle of the day. I never knew this little scheme to hang fire, and by the time I got back to the office I frequently found two or three calls on the slate.

"An excellent friend is commonly supposed the doctor, once advised me to settle in the country, where the competition was so great. In six months I came near starting to death. The place was so sparsely populated and the patients so far apart that my time and clothes were worth more than my fees. By selling my library I managed to buy a horse and buggy, and go to work on the co-operative plan. I divided my patients into four districts, each of which I visited once a week. My method was to keep a family in thorough repair for a stipulated sum per month. Nearly all the inhabitants became subscribers, and I might have thrived well on my little monopoly if another smart doctor hadn't stepped in and reduced the rate. I returned to the city, there settled down and married, and after having a fair success, I thought men die on my hands, I found myself famous and in possession of a lucrative practice.

"No, I don't think there is as much bleeding of patients as is commonly supposed. Of course human nature is the same in a doctor as in any other. It is always number one, and the patient's number two. There are some people whom you have got to keep on your list all the time. They would not be happy unless they could tell their friends all about the torpidity of their liver and the unsoundness of their lungs. A doctor must humor such people, and assure them they are really ill whenever they take a fancy to being so. This is a kind of bleeding that will never stop so long as there are such people in the world. The old doctor studied under me, and I might as well say that he is now a good doctor at his own expense. In his early days of struggle a friend twitted him upon taking so long to cure a patient. "Why, man," replied the old doctor, "I have so few patients that I can't afford to cure any of them."

"Speaking of quacks," continued the doctor after a pause, "you would be surprised that a strong hold the empirical fraternity have upon the people. They are easily convinced that there is something awful the matter with them. An aggravated case of this kind recently came under my notice. A man, whose name I do not remember, had been ill for months at a time, rushed wildly into my office one day and begged me to visit his wife. He said that if I could not get her over her migraines he would either have to procure a divorce for her or commit suicide. It seemed that the woman, during one of her husband's periodical absences, fell into the clutches of a female lecturer, who had her for all she was worth, about three months. When the doctor saw the shadow of her former self. She was melancholy and peevish, and was slowly wearing herself away. The whole house was turned into an apothecary shop, and the woman herself was a walking advertisement of the empiric's wares. At night she made herself hideous by wearing a complexion mask and medicated gloves that made her hands look like burnt cured hams. There was scarcely an inch of her whole body that was as nature made it. When I examined her she had on a liver pad, two lung pads, a porous plaster for a weak back, another for a weak chest, and a third for a weak stomach. I supposed, belts and bands on arms and legs to prevent varicose veins, tight boots to keep the feet warm, and magnetic clothing wherever there was room for it. The doctor was puzzled and wonderfully made, with all patent appliances. I felt very sorry for the husband, who seemed to think a great deal of his wife. He was very patient with her, although more than once he confessed that it was hard for a man to love, cherish and protect a woman who toggled herself out in such a fashion. It was a hard case to treat, but we finally conquered." - New York Evening Sun.

HEALTHFUL FOOD. A large proportion of the baking powders in the market contain Ammonia, Alum, or Acid Phosphates, and as a matter of prudence housekeepers should insist upon knowing ALL the ingredients of their favorite brand. A knowledge of one of the ingredients is of little value, as it is no guarantee of the wholesomeness of the others; hence no reliance should be placed on any baking powder unless the manufacturers plainly state each and every ingredient used in its preparation.

If your patronage for a baking powder has been obtained by artfully written advertisements extensively circulated, note carefully whether or not its manufacturers impart to the public a knowledge of every ingredient that enters into their compound. Where this information is withheld would it not be wise to discontinue the use of that particular kind of baking powder and purchase instead one so pure and free from objectionable ingredients that there is in it nothing to conceal?

Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder is made only of strictly pure Grape Cream of Tartar, Bicarbonate of Soda, and a small portion of flour, and does not contain Ammonia, Alum, Lime, Acid Phosphates, or any adulteration whatever. CLEVELAND BROTHERS, Albany, N. Y.
