The Muddle Over the Monoghan Will Case.

TWO CLAIMANTS TO A FORTUNE.

Half-Brothers Bearing the Same Name Making a Bitter Fight.

The Obscure Will: Thomas Monoghan—The Surrogate Holds that What is Written, Not What is Meant, Determines to Whom the Property Shall Go—The Rightful Heir Likely to Lose the Suit.

New York, Oct. 30.—The Monoghan will case, which has been hearing in the Surrogate's Court the past few days, has demonstrated that what a man means cannot affect what he puts in writing.

Old Thomas Monoghan was a house painter who quit painting houses in 1871 and commenced to dabble in real estate. So successful was he that when he died in September, last year, he left property valued at $500,000.

Long years ago the painter was married, but he separated from his wife, Annie McEvoy Monoghan, in 1854. Of the three sons she bore him only one has survived—Thomas Monoghan, Jr., a blonde, about 30 years of age. He has not seen or heard of his father for many years, having lived on a farm in Iowa.

After separating from his first wife Monoghan married again, although for a number of years before Annie McEvoy died he lived with the present Mrs. Monoghan. There is a grave question, even among his lawyers, whether the oldest son by the second marriage is legitimate.

On the day before the old painter died he made a will dividing his property almost equally between his "beloved daughter, Rose Monoghan, now living with me," and his "beloved son, Thomas Monoghan, Jr."

The latter was the oldest son of the second Mrs. Monoghan. He is a fine looking young fellow with a brown mustache and a dashing air. Unlike his half brother, he is dark. He was prepared to enter into the enjoyment of the property left to him, when the older young Monoghan put in an appearance and objected. He claimed to be the "beloved son, Thomas Monoghan, Jr.," and said that his half brother had no right to the name, and consequently not to the estate.

Surrogate Ransom practically decided in the blonde's favor yesterday. "There seems to be no doubt from the evidence," he says, "that the proponent (second young Monoghan) was the party meant by his father to receive the benefit of his estate. But, unfortunately for him, he failed so to state. In a case like this we must go by what the will states, not by what the testator is thought to have meant. The objector is the legitimate son of Thomas Monoghan, Jr., and seems to have a right to the name. The proponent has no such right."

Lawyer Thaddeus B. Wakeman thereupon arose and asked for an adjournment. "This view of the case is a complete surprise to us," was his first remark. "We have diligently searched the records of the Catholic churches, hoping to prove that the objector is not entitled to his name, but is really known as William Monoghan. We ask for a little more time."

An entertaining discussion among counsel ensued over this proposition, which Surrogate Ransom finally settled by adjourning the hearing until Wednesday of next week. In return for this privilege, however, he ordered that the proponent pay the fees of the objector's witnesses and his hotel expenses as well. The Surrogate also added sarcastically that the surprise of the counsel at his view of the case was not so much a surprise of the facts as a surprise of the law.

Had the old painter simply added the words "Now living with me" after his son's name, as he did after his daughter's, the present litigation could not have been possible. As it is now, all the indications are that Thomas Monoghan, Jr., instead of providing for the wants of the son, whom he loved with all the warmth of a father's affection, has simply enriched the child whom he cast off many years ago.

FIFTEEN LIVES LOST.

A Steamship Burned—Many Passengers Killed by Fire and Water.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 29.—The steamboat Oliver Belmont, from St. Louis, was burned at Milliken's Bend, 25 miles above Vicksburg, early yesterday.

Most of the passengers and crew were asleep, when at 3:30 o'clock an alarm of fire was sounded, and almost before any one was awake the boat was aflame. The blaze originated on the lower deck, from what cause is not known, and communicated with the dry cotton was soon burning with great fierceness. The crew of the boat were aroused, and with the passengers who were awake gave the alarm to those who were asleep.

A rush was immediately made for the forward part of the boat, and many got off in safety, but that avenue of escape and others were soon cut off, and the unfortunate passengers and crew were forced to plunge into the water.

The crew of the boat displayed commendable coolness, and every effort was made to rescue those who had not got ashore. Chief Engineer Ed. Bird launched the yawl of the boat, and he, with other men, succeeded in picking up many of the unfortunate in the water.

Some, however, were beyond reach, and were either burned to death or sunk beneath the waters to rise no more. The alarm was communicated to the people of Milliken's Bend and the bank of the river was soon crowded with villagers, who assisted in the work of rescue and hospitality, throwing open their houses to the survivors.

Besides a large number of cabin passengers there were over 200 deck hands on board. The deckies were on their way to work on the levees south of Vicksburg. The passengers lost all their personal property.

The list of the lost, as furnished the steamboat company by Capt. Thorvegan is made up as follows: Two children of Dr. Worrall of Baton Rouge; three chambermaids; Samuel V. Erickson; a daughter of Mr. Adams of Omaha; five cabin boys; a crew of Mrs. Francis of Natchez; Mrs. Waddell of New Orleans; a number of deckhands. The body of an elderly lady was found floating down the river and has not been identified.

The steamboat company place their loss at about $125,000.
