LAWRENCE COLLIERY FIRE

Work on the Dam Progressing—The Fire a Stubborn One.

The fire in the Lawrence colliery is burning slowly, but strong, and the arrangements to drain out that part of the colliery are progressing rapidly. It will take about a week to complete the dam in the tunnel.

When the water is turned into the place 502 yards of gangway, beside numerous breasts and other openings, will be flooded. This will cut off about 1-7 of the colliery's present production, but it is thought this loss will be made up by increased production in the parts of the mine not affected by the fire.

THE MARCH TO MALOLOS.

The Most Decisive Fighting of the War With Filipinos.

THE AMERICAN CASUALTIES

For Two Days Are 45 Killed and 145 Wounded.

COL. EGBERT AMONG THE DEAD.

He Had Served Continuously as a Line Officer For Nearly Forty Years—Prince Loewenstine, Formerly on the Staff of General Miller, Was Killed in Front of the Firing Line—One Man of the Tenth Pennsylvania Killed and Three Wounded. General MacArthur Leads the March to Malolos.

Manila, March 27.—The United States troops, under Brigadier General Lloyd Wheaton, captured the town of Malinta, beyond the Tullihan river, yesterday after a sharp fight. Colonel Harry C. Egbert, of the Twenty-second regular infantry, was killed. Prince Loewenstine, formerly at Iloilo, somehow got in front of the firing line and was shot in the side, dying almost instantly. A German who accompanied him was wounded. Prince Loewenstine was formerly honorary aide on the staff of General Miller.

The American casualties yesterday were much lighter than those of Saturday, the total losses thus far reported since the engagement commenced being 45 killed and 145 wounded.

General Wheaton entered Malinta, which is a small village of huts, at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The United States gunboat Helena and other gunboats have been shelling Malabon, about a mile northwest of Calocan, for several hours.

The insurgents made a fierce resistance to the American advance up the railroad at Malinta. In addition to the fatal wounding of Colonel Egbert several men of the Twenty-second infantry and several of the Oregon and Kansas regiments were killed.

Evidently anticipating a bombardment by the fleet, a thousand rebels vacated Malabon Saturday night, leaving a few to burn the town. General Wheaton's brigade, composed of the Second Oregon regiment and Twenty-third infantry, stretched out along the railroad from Calocan to the Tullihan river, was powerless to prevent the withdrawal, owing to the natural obstacles and to the strong opposition. A column of smoke at daybreak was the first intimation of the enemy's intentions, but others followed at various points, all soon blending in a dense balloon shaped cloud. The flames of the burning rice mills and large buildings could be plainly seen from Calocan, despite the strong sunlight.

By 11 o'clock in the morning the only building of importance not destroyed in the center of the town was a large stone church, but even at noon fresh fires were started among the native huts in the outskirts of Malabon, although the general exodus took place much earlier. Many of the rebels sought refuge in the suburbs Navotas and Casag, or were driven inland by the shells of the Helena, Callao, Ningpanang and Laguna de Bay.

In the meantime General Wheaton's brigade held the railroad to the river, but was unable either to repair the bridge, which had been destroyed by the enemy, or to advance, owing to the opposition and the hills on the other side.

The calculations of both General Hale and General Harrison Gray Otis, whose brigades constituted General MacArthur's division, were much interfered with by the character of the country in front of both, and the enemy was able to take advantage of this, so that the operations against Navaliches and Polo were delayed, though the right wing of the division swung out, sweeping the enemy in a northwesterly direction.

General Wheaton's headquarters on Saturday night were about half a mile south of the river, on the railroad. The opposite bank was protected by a blockhouse and intrenchments. Occasionally the artillery and infantry fired across the stream. Finally the engineers moved a construction train up to the bridge, the iron framework of which remained, and began to replace the floor. While this was going on the Second Oregon regiment crossed the river on the left, and the Twenty-second on the right, with four companies of the Twenty-third infantry supporting the latter regiment. A rising, clear ground stretched away a distance of half a mile to Malinta, situated on its crest.

In front of the village were strong Filipino intrenchments, but no Filipinos were to be seen. Apparently they had fled. The Twenty-second regiment approached diagonally, with General Wheaton and his staff close behind, and scouts closely observing the ground.

When the Americans were within about 300 yards of the intrenchments the Filipinos suddenly volleyed heavily. The Twenty-second, which was holding the center, suffered considerably, but, with the Oregon on the left and the Kansas on the right in the woods, the fighting was kept up for
