

Tears from a Descendant of Heroes.

It was midnight and cold. A few shivering newsboys close by the alley hung round a chestnut vender's stand like flies round the bung of a molasses barrel. The few passers hurried along with their coat collars turned up and eyes straight ahead. Trade wasn't good. Suddenly a heartrending shriek broke the stillness, followed by piteous sobbing. The chestnut man, wringing his hands like a maniac, hung over his overturned stand. Sparks and glowing coals streamed across the sidewalk. A couple of boys shot out of sight around the nearest corner. The sobs grew louder and mingled with imprecations in an unknown tongue. Like magic a crowd gathered. A policeman sauntered over. A herdic dashed up. Still the sobs burst from the bearded face of the poor foreigner. Some of the crowd laughed.

The herdic man asked him why he didn't chase the gamins and give them a sound thrashing. He had never thought of that, but at the word started after his tormentors, still sobbing. It was too late. He came back, righted his capized apparatus, scraped up the chestnuts and replaced them over the little fire that remained, crying all the while like a whipped schoolboy. The crowd scattered, the herdic driver drove on, the sobs of the chestnut man grew less and less until the frosty air turned them into a chatter.

"Them Dogoes ain't wuth nothin," said one young fellow to another as they hurried down the street. "They hawl like babies."

And yet Caesar's legionaries and Garibaldi's riflemen were of that race.—Boston Journal.

A Troublesome Girl Saint.

The state and general governments are very much alarmed over the Indian troubles in the western part of this state, in the Sierra Madre mountains. According to the reports which have reached here during the last few days, the Yaqui Indians have been greatly aroused by the wholesale massacre of their neighbor and friendly tribe at Tomachie by government troops. The peaceable Yaquis in the valleys of Sonora and Chihuahua are leaving their farms and ranches, and with their wives and children are gathering at an appointed rendezvous in the mountains north of Trinidad, where they have discovered another patron saint in the person of a beautiful Mexican girl named Anita Roca, whose father is a shepherd.

St. Anita urges the Indian worshippers to make war upon the Mexicans, and to reclaim the rich Mexican lands in the Yaqui valley which the government has taken from them. There are several hundred Indian braves and about 200 Mexicans now preparing to begin their depredations and war of extermination. They are nearly all well armed, and are expected to begin their campaign as soon as winter sets in.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

More Canadians Here Than in Canada.

There is trouble in the Young Men's Conservative club of Toronto. President Armstrong recently made some remarks derogatory to the Conservative government as to its policy, which allowed wholesale immigration of Canadians to the United States, and said Canada was being annexed to the republic by job lots. This led to charges that he was not loyal to the Conservative party, and at a meeting today the club was asked to pass a resolution expressing its disapproval of Armstrong's views. In the discussion that followed it was asserted that there were now more native born Canadians in the United States than in Canada, and more in Chicago than in Toronto. The resolution was defeated.—Cor. Chicago News-Record.

A Prelate's Wicked Brother.

It is rumored that one of the brigands who have been making havoc in the Campagna is a brother of the vicar general. Not long ago he headed a party of desperadoes that attacked the vehicle of a church dignitary on the outskirts of Rome. The divine was horribly frightened, but was reassured by the highwayman, who declared he would not harm so well meaning a man as himself. In a short while monsignore and the masked man were in deep conversation, the former having been completely won over by the distinguished manners of the brigand. A few days later monsignore received a courteous note explaining that a fur lined cloak was needed, and stated that it might be left at a certain spot.—Baltimore American.

"Sweating" and English Dressmaking.

England is finding that there is as much "sweating" in dressmaking as in the tailor trade. It has been discovered that the most aristocratic west end dressmakers do little in their own shops beyond cutting and basting linings, giving out the rest to wretched women forced by the pittance they can earn—$2.50 to $3 per week—to live in miserable tenements and unsanitary disease breeding rooms.—New York Times.

The Oldest Mason.

Hugh Boyd and Mrs. Fannie Johnson were burned to death in a dwelling house fire at St. John's on Nov. 25. Mr. Boyd is said to have been the oldest Mason in the United States. He had been cared for by the order for the past fifteen years.—Detroit Dispatch.

Novel Use for Jails.

Some of Kansas' empty jails are at present being used to store the surplus wheat. This indicates a healthy state of morals and finances.—Kansas City Journal.

The commissioners of the District of Columbia have issued an order to the effect that all the theaters in Washington must be fitted throughout with electric lights.

Mr. Clarkson, of the national Republican committee, is not a general and does not like to be called by that title.

The personal estate of the late Duke of Manchester was worth only $3,165.
