NEWS BREVITIES.

During the last ten years the royal lottery has yielded the Italian government $124,000,000 from 1,786,189,772 tickets issued.

The school board of Springfield, O., has prohibited the use of the skipping rope by the girl pupils, on the ground that it is injurious to their health.

A sudden increase in country drug stores is reported from portions of Georgia, where a new law abolishes bar-rooms and permits druggists and physicians to sell liquor for medicinal purposes.

An Erie railroad engineer always catches his dinner as he passes his residence in Wellsburg, his wife handing it to him as the train goes by, and she has missed but once in the past eight years.

Chinamen who fish in California waters do not return the young fish taken in large numbers in their nets, but leave them on land to die. In this way many of the shad planted from the east are being destroyed. Lobsters share the same fate.

The Italian minister of public instruction lately appointed an ex-privat professor in the university at Pavia. In his first lecture the professor told his pupils that "belief in God and a future life was a myth." Though petitioned to revoke his commission, the minister refuses to do so.

Mario, the late Empress of Russia, had a fancy for collecting prayer-books, and had a great many of them at her death. The late Czar distributed them among the various regiments at St. Petersburg to be preserved in glass cases in the regimental libraries.

Interesting new discoveries have, Nature says, been made in Pompeii. A house has been excavated which was in course of construction when the terrible catastrophe occurred, and which differs materially from all other Pompeian houses in its plan.

At the second lot of the Opera in Paris, some young men in a box invented a new amusement. They brought with them a life-sized doll in gold-beaters' skin. While the music played they made the doll dance on the front of the box; when the music ceased they laid the doll down carefully and lavished the most delicate attention upon it.

A genuine Amati violin, made for Louis XIV., is now owned by the family of Lipinsky, in Pesh. The sides are ornamented with fleurs de lys and the royal arms are painted in oil on the back. The instrument remained until 1789 in the Garde Meuble, Paris, since which, after many changes, it fell into the hands of the present owners.

A New Hampshire farmer recently agreed to sell his farm for $2,000, but when the day came he told the expectant purchaser that his wife was in hysterics about the trade, and he "guessed he'd have to back out." The purchaser complained, and finally asked how much more would induce him to sell. "Well," replied the thrifty son of the Granite State, "give me $250 more, and we'll let her cry."

One of the crew of a fishing vessel, who had thrown a coffee mug in the face of a shipmate on the high seas, pleaded guilty before Judge Nelson, of Boston, subject to the opinion of the court whether the facts in the case, which were agreed to, constituted a crime under the laws of the United States. The judge decided that they did not—in other words, that a coffee mug is not a dangerous weapon.

The Scotch are proverbially a thrifty race. A short time ago the traveler of a well-known wholesale house in London called on a Glasgow trader for the usual annual account. With much apology this gentleman professed his inability to pay, but offered a bill at three months in place of the ready cash. After some demur this was accepted, and the necessary document drawn up and settled. Said the debtor: "Noo, my laddie, that's finished, I'll discount it for ye if ye weel." And the bill was discounted.

Serious losses have been discovered in the Pitti and Uffizi galleries of Florence. Valuable tapestries and paintings were missing, and Prof. Pigorini was appointed to make a thorough investigation of the spot. He catalogued every article, and compared his list with ancient ones existing, and the result was that one evening he quietly said, as he was walking with the conductor: "Will you do me a great favor, Sig. —?" "Yes, certainly. What is it?" "Only to resign your position to-morrow."

The late Lord William Lennox is said to have been the last survivor of those who witnessed the exciting scene at the Duchess of Richmond's ball at Brussels. Lord William's father, then Duke of Richmond, was asked by Wellington for a map, and took him into an outer room to show him one. There the great captain, after studying it some moments, made a sudden mark with his thumb-nail, saying: "I shall fight him there!" The map, with the mark, has of course, been reverently preserved.

The Empress Eugenie has had in all her life no more devoted friend than the Prosper Merimee. He loved her in her babyhood. A friend of his one day met him in the Rue de la Paix, leading by the hand a girl about three years old, with a beautiful complexion and charming blue eyes, and asked him where he was going with his little charge. "I am taking the daughter of one of my friends to the pastry cook," replied Merimee, "to buy her some cakes." The fair, blue-eyed child was the little Eugenie de Teba, the daughter of the Countess de Montijo.

Tobacco in Italy is a monopoly of the government, which largely buys Kentucky, Virginia and Ohio brands. Kentucky leaf makes all the "Cavour cigars," or three-fourths of all the cigars smoked in the peninsula; Virginia leaf is manufactured into the "straw cigars" of Milan, and Ohio leaf turns out the "Havana cigars," somewhat after our own plan of Havana fillers and Connecticut wrappers. There are in the kingdom eight principal manufacturers, which turn out about 6,000,000 cigars daily. There is very little cigarette or pipe smoking; from the king to the lazzarone the whole nation smokes the "Cavours." They cost only a cent.

Mabel and Henri. She was alone in the world. Her various relatives had gradually passed away, and, by a strange coincidence, just as the last one passed, she found herself alone. Alone, did we say? Yet, not utterly, for her dear piano was left her, and seating herself before it, she softly played the one sweet air, the only one that she played completely.

It was true that it was rumored that the mortality among her relatives was attributed to too often listening to this strain of the lovely morceau, but nevertheless it brought back to her tender memories of childhood and she played it to herself dreamingly, "The Maiden's Prayer."

"Mabel, play me that strain again." It was a young man who spoke, and he leaned over the piano and watched her delicate fingers meander over the bass notes in the romantic cross-hand movement.

"Ah, Henri," responded Mabel, "I could play it to you forever." A slight shudder crossed the marble brow of the young man as he responded: "It seems to me to be a tone-picture of unquelled beauty. Observe the flights of the right hand into the highest notes; even so might a pure prayer rise into the heights of the blue empyrean."

"But see, Henri," said the maid, "now the melody is hid beneath the deep notes of the bass."

"And, even so, the highest thoughts must fall again to earth and seek the practical. Mabel, we are poor. I am an inventor, and yet hope to perfect my delicious steam calliope, which will bring me fame and fortune. Till then—adieu! Accept this as a last memento of one who loves you fondly."

He has gone. She tearfully opened the package. It contained a small musical box which played two tunes, "Then You'll Remember Me" and "The Sweet By-and-By"—sad reminders of his affection and hopes.

Five years had passed. Mabel Jangleure was no longer young, but she was interesting and full of witching grace.

She had boldly faced fortune and had turned music teacher. Many, many pupils had come to her, and she had taught them all "La Priere d'une Vierge." She was no longer poor, but her heart was poverty stricken indeed. At night she would sit in her solitary abode and play the well-remembered morceau (she had it by heart now), and would grind out the two airs from her beloved musical box. She sat one evening slowly grinding. Her thoughts were far away, as she turned the crank: "Then you'll remember—"

"Mabel Jangleure!"

"Henri de Homberg!"

And they were in each other's arms. "I have come to claim you, my own," said he, "I am able to marry now."

"Oh, Henri," sobbed Mabel, as her arms timidly encircled his neck and her fingers played "The Maiden's Prayer" on his back, "has the enlilope succeeded?"

"No, my darling," was the response, "I have invented a method which will teach anybody to play the piano thoroughly in half an hour, and I am rich."

They are wedded now, and their life since then has been one round of bliss, only made more perfect by the sweet sounds of the time which had hallowed the days of their younger love.

A Vermont Fox Story.

When they tell a story in Vermont they never leave anything to be added. The London Union is responsible for the following: A man has for several years been in the pursuit of a cunning fox, but every attempt to catch him has been defeated. A few weeks ago he put a beef's head on the hill and set a trap in a convenient place for the fox to fall into it. The next time he went to it he found fresh fox tracks, and put his hound to work. The chase was lively, but the fox was too much for the dog, and on two or three different occasions he actually sat down, face toward the dog, and waited for him. In this way he coaxed the dog over a good deal of territory, and finally, coming to the hill where the trap was set, the fox made a straight line for the trap, jumped over it, and the old dog, pursuing the same line, put his foot in the trap and stopped right there, leaving the fox to pursue the rest of the journey alone.

A Far-Seeing, Calculating Old Skinflint.

"Talk about your mean men," said old Pioneer Skinderson, at Phil McGovern's saloon the other night; "the very tightest, closest, far-seeing, calculating old skinflint I ever seed, was old Klamskatter, the mine superintendent, who died up at Gold Hill the other day."

"Was, eh?" encouragingly remarked a customer who was feeding Phil's bulldog with petrified sandwiches from the lunch table.

"Yes, sir; he was just pizen. He was closer than the bark to a tree. When he was running the Hornet mine up at Virginia, he used to skulk around the levels disguised as a mule tender, just to pipe off the men who didn't keep hard at it, so as to dock 'em the next Saturday."

"Why, the dern cuss!"

"But wait. He actually encouraged a drill-runner to tell a long story one day while they were waiting for some machinery to be repaired, and afterward docked the man half a day, and all the fellows that heard it four bits apiece for stopping to laugh. He charged one man ten cents for a single grin."

"Great Gosh!"

"That's nuthin'. Sim Briggs, who was up on the lode when the miser died, said that about an hour before Klamskatter passed in his checks he sent for the doctor, and says he, 'Doc, give us the straight business. Is there any show for me?'"

"Nary show," says the doctor; "you'll strike bedrock afore night."

"Then," says old Klamskatter, "I want some of you fellows to carry me up to Mount Davidson right off. If I can light out from there it will save my soul a clear mile of transportation."

"And did they do it?" asked a man who had walked over by the stove.

"Wall, no," replied the narrator, simply. "The boys took him over, put him on the cage, and let him down to the lowest level of the Hornet instead. They said that they guessed he had made a little mistake about the direction somehow. To the best of their judgment, his soul was going the other way."

A Column of Hot Water One Hundred Feet High.

North Montana River Pros. One of the most singular natural phenomena in this section of Montana is the formation of two geysers in the strip of country known as the "Sage," about a mile and a half from Mr. Patterson's ranch on the Shonkin. It was first seen about a month ago, but not until lately has it assumed proportions which constitute its wonderful formation. It is situated in a small canyon running out from the wall of rocks on the east side of Alkali lake. Two geysers have appeared, one of them being of monster proportions, throwing up a column of hot water and steam over one hundred feet high, the other spouting about fifty feet, but with a larger proportion of water, diameter, about four inches. They are intermittent in character and are active during the morning hours, about eight or nine o'clock. The formation of the country is a sandstone and gneiss and has all the appearance of being an ancient river bed. What has produced this curious phenomenon it is, of course, only useless to speculate, as there is no evidence of ancient volcanic activity and no hypothesis can be formed which will account for it.

The hair of a St. Louis merchant who took a vow not to cut it until he accumulated $5,000, already hangs below his coat collar.

Something about Bricks.

In the antiquity of the brick as a building material it is needless, nor is it indeed our intention, to insist. The great national collections of Europe, the British Museum foremost in the number, show us bricks, sun-dried and baked, from the ruins at Nineveh, and from the days of that city to the present moment bricks have never ceased to be an important instrument in the hands of the builder. That throughout Asia Minor they were largely employed we have seen, only very recently, proved in these columns, M. Bayet, in his work on Miletus, having shown that the famed palace of Croesus was built of no more costly materials than honest bricks. What those bricks were, and their quality, are even to this day appreciated by the natives, who for many centuries have plundered the ruins to build or to patch up their own even more ruinous houses. The use of bricks among the Romans, who largely employed them as building materials, as we see in the familiar instance of the Temple of Concord, has been more than once the subject of the inquiry of industrious antiquaries, for the Romans were not content with producing the flat, tile-like brick which is so often to be met with in the lower portions of antique structure scattered over the empire, and that are known in England, but their bricks were indelibly stamped with the mark of their maker, the names of the reigning consuls, and sometimes the year. From this source, then, more than one patient archaeologist has gathered a rich store of information. But few inquiries have ventured far on the apparently arid and difficult road, which has hence remained little explored.—From the Builder.

Druggists Speak.

"When we are asked to recommend something to nourish and strengthen the blood we always say take Malt Bitters."

"Best blood purifier we know of."

"Rapidly displacing all other bitters."

"For weakness, nervousness and the effects of dissipation nothing like 'Malt Bitters.'"

"Women and children take them freely."

JACOB LOECRMAN, 274 Clinton Street, Buffalo, N. Y., says he has been using Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil for Rheumatism; he had such a lame back he could not do anything, but one bottle has, to use his own expression, "cured him up." He thinks it the best thing in the market. Paul G. Schull, agent.
