A STRANGE CASE

Mysterious Absence Followed by a Strange Reappearance

Denver offers the latest theme for the psychologist and the alienist.

The incident which furnishes material for these incidents began six months ago. A clerk in the Southern Pacific railroad offices in the western city called his wife over the telephone one day at noon and told her to have lunch ready for him in a few minutes, as he had his hat on and would catch the next street car for home. He hung up the receiver, left the room apparently to go home and—disappeared. From that moment all trace of him was lost. Nathum Wing was a man of excellent habits, his business affairs were in sound condition, he was a valued employee, his future seemed bright, his home life was happy. No one could suggest a motive for his disappearance. They then searched the city and the whole neighborhood. Special detectives were employed. The efforts to find the slightest clue were futile. After a while Mrs. Wing, concluding that it would be useless to hunt further and thinking that perhaps her husband had met with death in some strange way, sold their home and she and the child went to Boston. It was there that her parents lived.

Now comes the sequel. A few days ago a young clerk in a railroad office in New Orleans asked a fellow clerk to tell him where Columbus street was. It was on Columbus street in Denver that his home had been. When he was told that he was in New Orleans he would not believe it. He was finally convinced. He had come to the New Orleans office a few weeks previously, had applied for a position, had obtained it and had started to work. He remembered nothing of all this. He could remember only the fact that he had left his desk at lunch time and had started out to board a street car to go home. As for the six months that intervened, his mind was blank. He lost his faculties suddenly in Denver and regained them a half year later just as suddenly in New Orleans. After much effort he got into communication with his wife in Boston and by this time they are together once more.

What can be more fascinating to the student than these mysteries of the human brain? Here in the case of Nathum Wing is a psychic phenomenon of marvelous interest. His story is striking as a narrative; as an episode of scientific value it is of exceptional weight. An analysis of all the elements and facts that resulted in the six months of total forgetfulness would be profitable and diverting.—Louisville Courier-Journal.
