WHAT THE STATES HAVE DONE

President Roosevelt is not the pioneer when it comes to stopping the centralization of wealth, although many are under that impression. For thirty years or more the states have been steadily at work curbing syndicate wealth along lines of which the president seems to assume he is the Columbus. As far back as the early '70s Wisconsin passed the famous Potter law regulating railway rates. A majority of the states have rate-making railway commissions possessing and exercising the power last year conferred on the interstate commerce commission. States have minute laws against trust organizations and conspiracies in restraint of trade; states have laws against over-capitalization—even now Minnesota is maintaining an action against the Great Northern to enjoin the issue of $60,000,000 in stock on the claim that it is water; states have graded inheritance taxes and some corporation income taxes. In addition, either directly or through dependent municipalities, states are regulating the price of gas, water, electrical current, urban transportation and many other things. In the field of prosecution it is doubtful if any attorney general of the United States was ever as active as Monnett of Ohio or Hadley of Missouri. It is not true that the states possess no power, or, possessing it, have not exercised it. Most of the effective work in controlling greed has been done by the states. What has been achieved by the states is many-fold more important than what has been achieved by the nation. President Roosevelt should recall the Ford act before again saying that the states are powerless to curb syndicated wealth. Compare the laws of New York and those of the district of Columbia, for which congress legislates in all things, and you will discover that New York is more Rooseveltian, if the word may be allowed, than the District of Columbia.

NATIONAL WEALTH

A writer in one of the popular magazines comments at length on the immensity of governmental expenditures in the United States, showing how millions are poured out by the nation and by the states and the cities, aggregating an amount that would have staggered the financiers of a generation ago, and, pausing to survey his rhapsody in figures, he exclaims: "And yet, strange to say, the nation's wealth increases as it never did before." Why should it not increase? Expenditures, however great, if the money be expended at home or for foreign products of value, do not lessen the nation's wealth. They take money from all the people and give it sometimes for value received and sometimes as a special favor to some of the people. But it stays here. Even the vast amount which is expended in enforcement of criminal laws is not an impoverishment of the nation, for it goes into circulation again at home. So with our pension appropriation, the maintenance of the army and navy and all departments of the national and local governments. But there are two important exceptions to this rule, to wit, the Philippines and the Panama canal. The experiment of taking over the sovereignty of the 1,200 oriental islands, with their 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 inhabitants, has cost us hundreds of millions of dollars and bids fair to run the bill up to billions, and there is nothing on the other side of the account. It must go on, however, until an honorable exit is open, and that consummation is not looming up in the near future. We went into the Panama enterprise after fifty years of reflection—went with our eyes open—and we shall stay and finish the work, but it cannot bring any return for many years, and may never be other than a losing investment. This is one of the reasons why it is expedient to buy at home all the material required in the Panama enterprise, if that can be done without submitting to extortion. The net outlay will be sufficiently immense without increasing it by discriminating against our own industrial interests.

Yankee Ingenuity Pand

William G. Ward, a merchant, recently had a stove in which a coal fire was burning, moved with other goods from his old home, on Blatt's hill, to his present apartment. He did not want the trouble of making a new fire, thereby exemplifying his Yankee ingenuity.

While driving through North Hartland, a farming village thirteen miles distant from here, he stopped at the home of E. J. Barnes to get warm. He said he sold pianos and Mr. Barnes became interested. Finally Mr. Barnes said he wanted to hear the tone of the instrument before he made a bargain.

Stepping to the telephone, Ward called up his store here, had a $350 instrument rolled up close to the telephone transmitter, and then ordered a saleswoman, Miss Elizabeth Harnett, to play a few selections, which she did.

The music over the wire enthralled the family, the deal was closed and the piano was shipped the Barnes family to day.—Winsted, Conn., dispatch to the New York World.

Dog Checked at Theater

For the first time in history, so said the wisecracker, a dog was checked in the courtroom of a New York theater last night. It happened at the Herald Square. Two women entered the theater and went immediately to the retiring room near the lobby.

One of them had carried in a bulldog under her opera cloak. She asked if she could have him checked, and checked he was, like a cane or umbrella, until the end of the performance.—New York Times.

Took Himself to Jail

John Hooligan of Lockville yesterday appeared at the Tolland county jail bearing his own mittimus, and informed the keeper that he had come to be locked up for ninety days.

"I got drunk and Judge Fisk sent me up for three months, and here I am," he said.

"Put what are you doing here alone?" demanded Jailor Babcock. "Where's the constable who brought you here?"

"Didn't anybody bring me," answered Hooligan in disgust; "he couldn't handle a horse. He's stuck in a snow-drift back in the woods. Can't a man get locked up after he's walked three miles without answering a lot of fool questions?"—Waterbury, Conn., dispatch to New York World.
