Owing to the strike of telegraphers San Francisco should be said to now be an almost wireless station.

The French wine raisers have found that raising Hades is far more costly than raising wine and have gone back to the latter vocation.

A Pittsburg millionaire has paid $5,000 for a noted picture known as "The Bath." It will probably need one after a short stay in Pittsburg.

The parade on the Fourth of July will be the finest ever held in Arizona and will be worth coming miles to see. And that will only be the starter.

Florence has given up its Fourth of July celebration and the natural inference is that the Florentians will come to Globe on the nation's birthday.

The mecca for high-priced lawyers will be moved from San Francisco to Denver about the time the trials of the recently indicted land grabbers are begun in the Rocky Mountain metropolis.

The only reported witticism of Mark Twain at his recent visit to royalty was his desire expressed to the British queen of buying Windsor palace. The queen probably construed it as a mere exhibition of the alleged Yankee's mania for trade.

The El Paso Herald with its usual up-to-dateness has gotten out a Jamestown Exposition number, containing a big boost for Globe with other Arizona cities and mining camps. While boosting El Paso the Herald never overlooks its neighbors.

Down in Bisbee the Chamber of Commerce has secured a more equitable freight rate from the Southwestern system. Globe business men will continue to pay the exorbitant and hoodlum rates of the Gila Valley road until they find out how easy it is to secure rates that are not confiscatory, by forming a commercial body, such as that in Bisbee. The railroad company will certainly not take the first step.

HOW TO PRESERVE PEACE

Whatever can be the declarations of the peace congress now assembled at The Hague, it is indisputable that the world in general is distrustful of the Japanese-American situation.

Without having any particular desire to play the role of Cassandra, the Herald is compelled to acknowledge that some justification exists for this feeling. It is true that the United States desires peace, but is such a desire sufficient to guarantee that peace will be maintained? The recent history of the far east supplies a very categorical reply in the negative to that question.

Only a few years ago Japan and Russia were the principals in a controversy somewhat analogous to the one now involving the United States and Japan. The issue of the controversy was the Russo-Japanese war. Is there no reason to dread that the issue of the present difficulty may be a jano-American war? History often repeats itself, and it seems to be preparing a repetition at present.

During the negotiations with Japan Russia continued to send insignificant detachments of naval and military forces to the far east just as the United States is now doing. Judged in the light of later events, it is evident that such a policy was suicidal. The Russo-Japanese war might have been averted and would in all probability have ended differently had Russia grappled with the situation boldly by pouring troops into Manchuria and sending all her warships to the far eastern waters.

At the present moment the United States is repeating Russia's mistake. Instead of concentrating the entire American navy in the Pacific, where it might prove efficacious in maintaining peace and would certainly be invaluable in the event of war, the Washington administration is keeping American battleships in the Atlantic, where they are not needed, and sending a few cruisers to the far east, by twos and threes, as a sort of appetizer for the Japanese. Four armored cruisers were dispatched to the Pacific station last autumn and two more have just been ordered there.

Common sense compels one to regard such a policy as calculated to provoke the very result which the United States desires to avoid. So long as Japan appears to be in a situation of overwhelming superiority in the Pacific she is not likely to adopt a more conciliatory attitude toward the United States, and the dispatch of American cruisers to the far east two or three at a time is more liable to excite Japanese susceptibilities than to soothe them. While making every effort to preserve peace the United States should so arrange its affairs that an outbreak of war might not find it unprepared, as was the case with Russia. That it is unprepared at present is revealed in the navy department's sudden decision to rush coal to the Pacific stations.

This is a step in the right direction, and it should be followed up by concentration of all American battleships in the Pacific—not to provoke war, but to preserve peace.—New York Herald.

Surgical Operation on Skyscraper

Amputation is to be applied to the Singer building, at Liberty street and Broadway.

Its top is to be sliced off and three additional stories sandwiched in between the seventh and eleventh floors. Work on the scaffolding began yesterday, and a small army of men will be occupied night and day until it is completed, the undertaking being confined to the original corner building, which is to be a part of the monster forty-one story structure now going up—the tallest office building in the world.

According to Ernest Flagg, the architect, the slicing is necessary in order that the eleven-story building shall conform in height and outline to the new fourteen-story addition.

Instead of actually raising the four top floors inclosed under the mansard roof, the roof and structural material will be removed in sections to the ground. The eighth, ninth and tenth floors will then be built on, after which the old mansard roof, inclosing the four additional floors, will be replaced section by section.—New York Herald.

Professor Wiley's Food and Drink

Professor H. W. Wiley, the government's chief pure food expert, is thoroughly normal in all of his habits. Persons unacquainted with Dr. Wiley are naturally prone to believe that he exercises great caution in the selection of his eatables and drinkables. On the contrary, he seems quite as careless in this regard as the average American. In his club in Washington, as well as in his home, he eats whatever is set before him without asking any questions about its purity, origin or preparation. He is no more abstemious than other normal persons, and although, at the request of his fellow members, he selected for his club a brand of Scotch whisky which stood the severest test of his scientific analysis, he is not particular about being served with that brand whenever he may order Scotch. Dr. Wiley's attitude toward his countrymen in the matter of comestibles is that announced by the ancient pedagogues: Do as I say, not as I do.

Ice Cream Social

The social will commence at 7 p. m. and ice cream and home-made cake will be served all the evening at 25 cents a plate. All are cordially invited and a pleasant time is anticipated.
