FREDERICK A. BURNHAM.

Frederick A. Burnham, who is under indictment in connection with handling the funds of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance company, of which he was president for about twelve years, is a native of Rhode Island. He went to New York in 1873 to practice law, making a specialty of insurance and commercial law. He had charge of the legal department of the Mutual Reserve and was called to the presidency to succeed E. B. Harper in 1895.

FOREIGN-MADE CITIZENS' RISKS BY LONG STAYS ABROAD

The chief of the bureau of citizenship in the department of state had so many inquiries in regard to the new law of citizenship and expatriation which has recently gone into effect, that he chose one of the magazines as a medium of communication with the public in reference thereto.

The new law, he says, is directed against fraud and does not in anywise modify the essential doctrine of citizenship or deny its privileges to those foreign born residents who honestly seek and are worthy of it, though it makes naturalization somewhat less easy than it formerly was.

The fraud under the old law consisted in naturalizing foreigners who had no real intent to become actual citizens, but who purposed to use their naturalization papers for temporary advantage or with the idea of returning to their native land and claiming exemption from military service and other liabilities by reason of their spurious American citizenship. A provision of the new law is that any naturalized American who goes abroad to reside permanently shall be held to have expatriated himself, the permanence of his residence to be presumed from certain facts. If he returns to his native country, two years' residence there raises the presumption of expatriation; if he settles in any other foreign country, five years' residence will work his expatriation. But to this is attached an important qualification. The presumption may be overcome by any reasonable proof that the foreign residence is temporary and that an intent to return exists. Even when return is impossible owing to lack of means, as in the case of old soldiers living on small pensions, proof of a real desire to retain American citizenship for legitimate purposes will be accepted by the authorities.

This provision of the law does not apply to native Americans. These retain their citizenship no matter where they may be nor how long they may absent themselves, until they voluntarily relinquish it or forfeit it by some act of their own. Children of Americans born abroad must report to an American consul upon reaching the age of 18 and must declare their intention of remaining American citizens and at 21 they must take the oath of allegiance.

The new law seems entirely wholesome and was believed to be necessary to correct abuses that existed under the old law.—San Antonio Gazette.

Acted on Orders

When I sailed with Commander McCalla several years ago, said a young naval officer, he had already made a reputation as a rigid disciplinarian. One day it chanced that a midshipman whom he had sent ashore went a little beyond the instructions given him with relation to his errand. The matter was not of the least importance, but McCalla chided him sharply, saying:

"When you receive an order, sir, do simply what you are told to do, and never a particle more or less."

The midshipman touched his hat respectfully, but he thought the rebuke uncalled for. A few days later McCalla summoned him and said:

"You will take a boat, sir, and go to postoffice ashore. See if there is a package addressed to me."

"Aye, aye, sir,"

The midshipman took a boat and went ashore. When he returned McCalla said:

"Well, sir, was there a package for me at the postoffice?"

"Yes, sir," replied the midshipman, touching his cap.

"Where is it?"

"At the postoffice, sir."

"What! You didn't bring it with you?"

"No, sir."

"Why not, sir?"

"Because I had no orders to do so, sir."

"I told you to get the package."

"Beg pardon, sir, but I understood you to tell me merely to see if there was a package for you at the postoffice, and I could not venture to do a particle more or less than my instructions indicated."—Interlake Tribune.

The Tobaccoist's Emay

One of the most peculiar things in the whole history of signs is the fact that while all other shopkeepers were patronizing the embryo painters the tobaccoist always called upon the wood-carver on the continent as well as in England. As long ago as Elizabeth's

The dollar derives its name from the high German "thaler," given to the coin of about a dollar's value, first coined in the Joachimthal (or valley), in Bavaria, and it was first called by its full name of Joachimsthaler.

The Philadelphia North American has summarized the results of the three months' inquiry of the committee which has been investigating the construction and furnishing of the Pennsylvania state capitol. It has been shown that of the $13,000,000 expended at least $5,000,000 was wasted in graft.
