Murray and Mack. Were the names "Charles A. Murray" and "Ollie Mack" to be written a thousand times on a thousand registers, it is doubtful if they would be recognized ten times out of that thousand...

high board partition that separated the two rear seats. So he helped himself to a box, placed it close against the fence, mounted to the top of it and peered across. Murray saw him and invited him over.

Most people also have seen the illustrious pair. Those Leadville people who heretofore had not seen them were given that opportunity at the Elks' last night—also to hear them—but even those people will remember them only as a pair, as a team, as a successful combination of fun producers.

A day later an advertisement in a theatrical paper, which called for a team of Irish comedians, one tall and the other short, attracted their attention. They answered it and were accepted at a salary of $35 per week.

Both actors were born in Indiana. Murray's home was in Centerville, while Mack lived in a distant part of the state. Fifteen years ago Ollie Mack went down to Centerville to visit his grandmother. Charlie Murray's father and mother lived next door to Mack's ancestors.

The success is phenomenal among persons knowledgeable in things theatrical. They have also been exceedingly fortunate. In all their career they have not been in a railroad wreck, they have never been caught in a theater fire, and they have escaped every other serious disaster that has befallen the theatrical profession.

Now Mack is short of stature, and he couldn't see across the top of the CATLIN & POWELL CO. Stock Brokers. Special Attention Paid to New York Curb, London Market, San Francisco Stocks, Unlisted Securities, Active and Inactive Mining Shares.
