They had no nice table to eat on, so Mrs. Millet fed her children on the door-step. Marie and Pauline waited till little Jean got his share of goat's milk and bread. So Mrs. Millet called it "Feeding Her Birds."

Their father worked in the fields and earned what he could. And they all lived happily together.

When little Jean Millet grew up he made a picture of them on the door-step, eating, and called it "Feeding Her Birds."

The Hands.
Man is the only animal having perfectly formed hands.

The fore-feet of a monkey are much like the hands of a man, only they are small, hairy and have claws instead of nails. They use these much like men use their hands. Other animals that use their fore-feet as we do our hands are the bear, rabbit, raccoon, squirrel and mouse.

The hands are made of the fingers, palm and wrist.

The joints are places where two bones are joined together. Some joints move quite freely. Fingers have hinge joints which can open and shut like a pocket knife.

The knuckles are the large joints of the fingers, of which there are three rows. They give strength to the fingers and greater usefulness.

The nails grow from little pockets in the skin, as the hair does. Both are parts of the outer skin.

The nails are made to give firmness and protection to the fingers; they are for the most part upon the bare surface of the true skin. The tender skin under the nails is called quick.

The fingers are important parts of the hand, for without them we could do little work. The fingers are small and long and are very useful. There are five fingers: the thumb, the first or pointing finger, the middle finger, the ring finger and the little finger.

The palm is the middle part of the hand. It is broad and thin. The palm is very useful, for we can hold things in the palm of our hands that we could not hold in our fingers. The skin is tougher there than in any other part of the hand.

The wrists are just above the hand and join the hand and arm together. The bones in the wrist are round and slick like pebbles. Without the wrist joints we could not move our hands unless moving the whole arm.

The hands serve many uses, so we should be careful to keep them clean at all times. They become hard and rough from exposure to the wind when wet, and from hard work and lack of care.

"Beautiful hands are those that do work that is earnest, brave and true."

Society Notes.

The Misses Griffey have resigned from the school because of the danger of crossing our very swollen river. We were glad to see them Tuesday morning, when they visited the school.

After several weeks absence on a visit to her sister in Washington City, Miss Mabel Netterville has returned and resumed her studies. She was present at the inauguration, and brings many stories of the wonders of Washington, and of that time.

Misses Kathryn Smith and Willie Lewis were in town in attendance on the Parish Teachers' meeting.

A number of the parish teachers attended the meeting on Friday.

Miss Kelley, State Inspector of Home Economics, was here on Friday. She was well pleased with the progress of the department. Miss Kelley delivered two most interesting lectures.

Mr. Fred Smith has a beautiful car, which makes him all the more the admired and envied Senior. The "plank road girls" hope for fair weather, good roads and frequent rides.

Preparations have begun for commencement. The grades are rehearsing. The singing classes are getting their voices in tune, and the high school students discovering their histrionic talent.

The Umbrella.

The umbrella is by no means a modern invention. They were found in the ruins of cities in Egypt, and their use in China and India is also very ancient. They were used by the Roman women.

"Umbrella" comes from Latin word Umbra, meaning shade. The women were delicate and needed shade. An umbrella was never used by a man until John Hanway was seen with one over him walking down the streets of London on a rainy day. John Hanway was not only the first man to use an umbrella but was the first person to use one for rain. He was ridiculed by every one whom he met.

There are various kinds of umbrellas that are made of a variety of materials. The principal part of an umbrella is the stick, to which all the other parts are attached. It is made of different materials, as steel, iron, tin. Some years ago they were made of wood.

The ribs are next principal part; the form, the shape are usually made of steel. In old times they were made of whale-bone.

They are attached to the stick by little steel catches called runners. They prepare the umbrella to open and shut. The ferule is the end of the stick between the last runners and the end of the umbrella. It is used to rest the umbrella upon, to keep it from getting soiled.

Next is the handle. It varies in shape and material, such as silver, gold, ivory pearl, scented woods and commonly carved wood. The cover is stretched over the ribs to form the shade. It is made of silk, satin, and different colors, but is commonly of cotton goods which does not last very long.

The umbrellas that were used in the old countries are not at all like ours. We have improved the shape a great deal. The Japanese use paper ones with highly colored flowers and figures on them.

The Chinese also use umbrellas. They make theirs of thatch grass, which they use altogether for shade.

The Japanese and Chinese umbrellas are the most attractive ones made.

It was about the middle of the 18th century that umbrellas were introduced into the United States.

Their use was almost confined to the women, and it was considered very effeminate to carry one. We call those that are used for shade parasols.

Umbrellas may be purchased from 50c to several hundred dollars, according to material of handle and cover.

Formerly it was a distinction of wealth to own an umbrella, now it is a mark of poverty to have none.

HOW THE DISCOVERY WAS MADE.
"Archimedes, you say, discovered specific gravity on getting into his bath. Why had the principal never occurred to him before?"
"Probably this was the first time he ever took a bath."

Professor—"Why does lightning never twice in the same place?"
Pupil—"Huh! it never needs to."

First student—"Your college never turns out gentlemen."
Second student—"No, our college allows gentlemen to go right on and graduate."

History Teacher—"Did I not tell you to be prepared with your history lesson? And here you can't repeat one word of it."
Scholar—"I didn't think it was necessary. I have always heard that history repeats itself."

April Fool at St. Joseph High School.

The first day of April opened with the usual cry "April Fool."

The pranks that caused the most excitement were those played on the faculty. Their hats were hidden, and those of the students, becoming or inappropriate, were forced into service.

At recess, a number of high school girls ran away. When they returned to school Mr. J. was inflicted condition (?) punishment on the run-a-ways. None of the bells would ring, for they had all been muffled causing much confusion of classes.

"Millet."

Jean Francois Millet was born in France in 1814. He was a peasant. He said when he was a boy that when he grew to be a man he would become an artist, and make pictures of peasants, and carry out his plan. He was called "The Dante of peasants, and Michelangelo of rustic art." Some of his pictures are called "The Sower" and "First Snow." Millet died 1875.

FEEDING HER BIRDS

They lived in France a great many years. Among them was a poor family of three little children, and mother and father. This was the Millet family.

They all lived in a very poor stone cottage. All they had was home-made. All the children's clothes were made by their mother. They wore little dresses called smocks. Their wooden shoes were called sabot.

Millet was the oldest girl, her little sister Marie loved her very dearly, and the boy was Jean. They had no beautiful dolls but one, and that was home-made. Marie loved the doll and kept it most all the time. Pauline played with Jean more than her older sister. They also had a little wooden wagon to play with, and that is all the toys they had.

A most unfortunate accident befell Mrs. Wimberley, wife of Mr. R. W. Wimberley, of "Osceola" plantation, last Sunday evening, while automobiling. With Mrs. Wimberley were Mr. Ribber and Misses Couvillon and Ward, who were coming to St. Joseph when they met Dr. Alverson and family enroute to Newellton. Both cars were going at a fair rate of speed and unfortunately the road was very narrow where the cars passed and in order to make room for Dr. Alverson, Mr. Ribber ran his car up on the side of a small knoll and Mrs. Wimberley lost her balance and was thrown out and fell with such force against the door as to receive painful injuries. It was at first thought her hip had been severely fractured and her friends felt very uneasy about her. On Tuesday Mr. Wimberley took her to New Orleans, and she was also accompanied by Dr. Lilly and Messdames Crothers and Hornsby. The trip was made without trouble and the reports from the city as to Mrs. Wimberley's condition are very encouraging. In fact her friends will be delighted to learn that her injuries were not as great as first feared, and the patient is now in the Presbyterian Hospital and when last heard from was doing nicely, and it is now thought she will be able to return to her home in about two or three weeks, which will be most gratifying news to her many friends.

Both cars were going at a fair rate of speed and unfortunately the road was very narrow where the cars passed and in order to make room for Dr. Alverson, Mr. Ribber ran his car up on the side of a small knoll and Mrs. Wimberley lost her balance and was thrown out and fell with such force against the door as to receive painful injuries. It was at first thought her hip had been severely fractured and her friends felt very uneasy about her. On Tuesday Mr. Wimberley took her to New Orleans, and she was also accompanied by Dr. Lilly and Messdames Crothers and Hornsby. The trip was made without trouble and the reports from the city as to Mrs. Wimberley's condition are very encouraging. In fact her friends will be delighted to learn that her injuries were not as great as first feared, and the patient is now in the Presbyterian Hospital and when last heard from was doing nicely, and it is now thought she will be able to return to her home in about two or three weeks, which will be most gratifying news to her many friends.

My experience of over forty years as a practical farmer and manufacturer is concentrated in this new No. 10 Planet Jr Horse Hoe

I have invented many and latest effort. It is the finest tool of its kind ever invented. Of this I am positive, and I guarantee this and the statements made in the descriptive circular.

The new No. 10 Planet Jr will do about every kind of work that any other coned hoe ever did, and much more besides. It is light, and easily handled, yet unusually strong. It is quickly adjusted to rows up to 3 1/2 feet apart; the vine-turret attachment is great for many crops at the last workings and the reversible steel moldboard plow is a wonder. To fully understand what this extraordinary tool will do, write at once for the special descriptive folder which shows 6 illustrations of this remarkable combination, with the proper arrangement for a large variety of work. Also send for our Instructive 64-page illustrated catalogue FREE showing 55 implements for farm and garden cultivation, seeding, etc. Both FREE. Write postal today!

April Fool at St. Joseph High School.

The first day of April opened with the usual cry "April Fool."

The pranks that caused the most excitement were those played on the faculty. Their hats were hidden, and those of the students, becoming or inappropriate, were forced into service.

At recess, a number of high school girls ran away. When they returned to school Mr. J. was inflicted condition (?) punishment on the run-a-ways. None of the bells would ring, for they had all been muffled causing much confusion of classes.

"Millet."

Jean Francois Millet was born in France in 1814. He was a peasant. He said when he was a boy that when he grew to be a man he would become an artist, and make pictures of peasants, and carry out his plan. He was called "The Dante of peasants, and Michelangelo of rustic art." Some of his pictures are called "The Sower" and "First Snow." Millet died 1875.

FEEDING HER BIRDS

They lived in France a great many years. Among them was a poor family of three little children, and mother and father. This was the Millet family.

They all lived in a very poor stone cottage. All they had was home-made. All the children's clothes were made by their mother. They wore little dresses called smocks. Their wooden shoes were called sabot.

Millet was the oldest girl, her little sister Marie loved her very dearly, and the boy was Jean. They had no beautiful dolls but one, and that was home-made. Marie loved the doll and kept it most all the time. Pauline played with Jean more than her older sister. They also had a little wooden wagon to play with, and that is all the toys they had.

A most unfortunate accident befell Mrs. Wimberley, wife of Mr. R. W. Wimberley, of "Osceola" plantation, last Sunday evening, while automobiling. With Mrs. Wimberley were Mr. Ribber and Misses Couvillon and Ward, who were coming to St. Joseph when they met Dr. Alverson and family enroute to Newellton. Both cars were going at a fair rate of speed and unfortunately the road was very narrow where the cars passed and in order to make room for Dr. Alverson, Mr. Ribber ran his car up on the side of a small knoll and Mrs. Wimberley lost her balance and was thrown out and fell with such force against the door as to receive painful injuries.
