our readers. It is a well.known fat that no insects or worms infest its foliage or attacks the wood, hence it is more than probable that its virtues as an insect repellant are not overestimated. The leaves, if picked in al. ternate layers with corn in the shuck will prevent the ravages of weevil, and it is more than probable would have the same effect with peas, beans and grain. Used in like manner with clothing, blankets and other woolen goods, it is a certain repellant against moths. Meat packed with either leaves or berries will not be attacked by worms. A decoction of the leaves protect them from the cutworm, etc. If these clams for the foliage and used as anon why they could not be where one is required for all purposes prospect of success. It is at least An Albany teacher states that it Afen difticult to get the names of their
