Fired the Last Shot

The last shot in the Civil War was fired by Sergeant A. T. Kendall, of the Orphan Brigade, who now lives on a farm less than five miles from Louisville, Ky. The Orphan Brigade surrendered ten days after Johnson and weeks after Lee. It was defending rolling stock of engines and cars, at Boykine's Mills, near Camden, S. C., from General Potter, who had seven thousand men, and was fighting ten days before Colonel Thompson ordered a retreat after the Federals had ceased to fire, but were trying to flank the brigade in the dusk. Kendall was reprimanded for firing after the command was given to fall back. Early the next morning an order came from Johnson to conclude an armistice with General Potter, and it was done, the Orphan Brigade laying down arms at Washington, Ga. The only picture taken of Mr. Kendall since he joined the militia in 1860 was obtained a few days ago, when, after much persuasion he went to Louisville for it. Until about a year ago he had not thought of the close of the war in the light that made him recognize the fact that he was the last man to fire a shot in it, and the story has never before been told. He is tall and straight and active, sixty-seven years old.

It is said that if all the people in the world would fast for one week there would be such a glut in food products that prices would be rent asunder and a commercial panic would ensue.

Curiosities of the Fisheries

What is the matter with the mackerel? They have all but disappeared and nobody has any idea of what has become of them.

In 1885 our mackerel fishery furnished half a million barrels of salted fish. Last year the catch was only about twenty-seven hundred barrels. What has become of this valuable food animal? Certainly it has not been wiped out by overfishing.

At the present time nearly two millions of dollars are invested in the business of hunting for mackerel—an industry prosecuted more in the way of a lottery than anything else, vessels being fitted out every spring in the hope that they will come back in their former abundance. Salted mackerel are now worth forty dollars a barrel.

If the great schools of earlier years have sought feeding grounds elsewhere how precious would be information of their whereabouts!

Dr. Johan Hjort, the Norwegian director of fisheries, says that the production of marine fishes is subject to such mighty influences as to be independent of the interference of man. For illustration, in 1902 and 1903 there was an extraordinary scarcity of fishes of all kinds over the whole North Sea and adjacent waters. Haddock almost disappeared, and such cod as were at hand presented a most miserable and diseased appearance.

At the same time was presented the unique spectacle of a general migration of large polar creatures from the Arctic Ocean southward. Arctic seals and white whales came down as far as the coast of Norway, and even to the Shetlands; and dead seabirds, much emaciated, were washed ashore by thousands along the northern shores of Europe.

Nobody knows what was the cause of these strange phenomena, all of which seemed to be in some way connected; but, two or three years later, the cod, haddock and other fishes were as numerous as ever. The activities of man had nothing to do with reducing their numbers or with the restoration in opening up the coal lands to the people of Alaska, who are enduring terrible hardships."

Mr. Heifner discussed with a Washington newspaper man the proposed question of the duty on wool and other subjects, and said he did not believe as much significance was attached to the action of the Ways and Means committee as a great many political leaders appeared to think. He remarked: "The people are deeply interested in the reduction of the tariff on woolen goods, and they are glad to have a reduction of 50 per cent in raw wool; but I do not think the action of the Democrats in the house on the wool schedule is going to have a controlling influence on

Much influence has recently been used to persuade congress and various state legislatures to enact laws forbidding the use of beam trawls in our own Atlantic waters, on the ground that they would soon wipe out all the fish. This is a notion disproved by experience in the seas of northern Europe, where such apparatus has long been in use. The Fisheries Bureau, far from believing the beam trawl objectionable, is anxious that it shall be adopted by our fishermen, because it would add enormously to the fish supply of the country.

Extending from Cape Cod all the way to Cape May is an area of ocean bottom, covering several thousand square miles, which is almost literally paved with fishes of a very valuable species, closely related to the celebrated European sole and fully equal to the latter as food. Its mouth is too small for a hook, however, and so not a single pound of this delicious food is brought to our markets in a year. If these fishes were sought with beam trawls they could be taken in practically unlimited numbers, not only to the great profit of the fishermen but to the substantial advantage of multitudes of people who would gladly welcome a new and cheap contribution to their diet.

Men admire in women the virtue of sympathy, which means a heart that is readily touched by a tale of sorrow or joy. Men like women who seem always to possess a continual source of sunshine in themselves, and whose faces are indexes of contented minds.

Some people think the best things in the world are the things they never get, and pass their lives longing for pleasures that are forever out of reach. What a mistake! There is happiness all around us, and he alone is miserable who murmurs and complains.

committee, has reported the Canadian reciprocity agreement without recommendation. The long siege of discussion has begun, and before the vote is reached every member of the Senate will likely express his views upon this great question. President Taft and his advisers declare the victory is won and that the senate will ratify the pact.

Democratic members of the house who bitterly scored one another in their caucus wherein wool schedules were considered, are repeating the policy of the special session inasmuch as they are now patting one another on the back; and having lost sight of their individual views are advancing the wool bill toward passage. And again it is demonstrated that the O K of the caucus is all that is needed to effectively squelch all objection in the ranks of the majority. The Underwood bill will soon reach quiet repose in the senate.

Mr. Warburton of the state of Washington has attracted a good deal of attention through his charge made in the house to the effect that congress is letting millions of dollars go to waste that might be collected in internal revenue taxes on tobacco. During his speech Congressman Warburton attacked the pending wool tariff revision, and declared the plea of the majority in the house of meeting revenue for the government treasury was not a genuine argument for keeping a high tax on wool goods. Branching out upon the subject of tobacco he declared: "If the government would put a reasonable tax on tobacco, which may be considered a luxury, it could let in woolen goods, cotton goods and sugar without any tariff whatever. If this country taxed tobacco as England or France does, we could close the doors of all the customs houses, except as to the importations of liquor and tobacco."

During the visit of C. N. Heifner of the state of Washington he presented a set of resolutions adopted by the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, the Seattle Commercial Club, the Seattle Rotary Club, the Seattle Arctic Club, and the Alaskan committee of the American Mining Congress, vigorously protesting against "the totally unjust delays of the government in opening up the coal lands to the people of Alaska, who are enduring terrible hardships."

Mr. Heifner discussed with a Washington newspaper man the proposed question of the duty on wool and other subjects, and said he did not believe as much significance was attached to the action of the Ways and Means committee as a great many political leaders appeared to think. He remarked: "The people are deeply interested in the reduction of the tariff on woolen goods, and they are glad to have a reduction of 50 per cent in raw wool; but I do not think the action of the Democrats in the house on the wool schedule is going to have a controlling influence on the voters of the country. The people of the West are more interested in other matters. There is no question that a large majority of the people favor the reciprocity treaty; but there is also an overwhelming majority of the people who seriously oppose the president's attitude with regard to Alaska."

Spending

To spend is not a sin. Unwise spending is what constitutes the sin.

For a child to be taught to hoard everything is as great a sin as to be allowed to spend without guidance.

The child who spends uselessly becomes a spendthrift and a parasite on the community.

The child who hoards becomes selfish, narrow and mentally an unhealthy citizen.

The School Savings Banks are doing much to adjust these two extremes. The schools and teachers who have undertaken this line of work are building well for the future commonwealth.

It is tending to both thriftiness and unselfishness.

School Banks were first introduced into the United States in 1885 from France. In 1893 there were 325 School Savings Banks that had $350,634 on deposit. In 1905 the number had increased to 4,541 and the deposits to $2,782,012.

"A penny saved is a penny earned" and the earning idea is always worth impressing upon the young.
