Washington Chat.

That there is a woeful lack of system and considerable waste of money in the purchasing of supplies for the various government departments in Washington, is shown by the facts brought to light in the investigations of the committee appointed by the president to look into such affairs.

For years it has been the custom for each of the several government bureaus to fix its own standard of quality in the different articles used and to make its own purchase of such articles, entirely independent of all other departments. By this method the government has been buying 28 different kinds of ink, 279 different kinds of pens, 12 different makes of typewriter ribbons and 123 different kinds of pencils. In some cases one department pays more than another for one and the same article. For instance, one bureau pays $1.70 for a dozen quarts of ink while another pays $3.00 per dozen quarts and similar conditions prevail as to many other articles.

To overcome this evil and to save Uncle Sam some money, it is now proposed to appoint a general supply board to be under the control and supervision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. The head of each government department is to designate one expert employe to serve as a member of the board which will prepare a schedule of the various supplies needed for all of the bureaus, advertise for proposals and then make proper award of contracts. This system would bring matters down to a strictly business basis and is something that should have been done long ago. The most carelessly managed private business concern would hardly permit such a wasteful system as that which has so long prevailed in the big offices of Uncle Sam.

Not in many a day has there been witnessed in Washington such a patriotic spectacle as that which took place at one of the leading theaters on Monday night. On that occasion, one hundred and eighty sailors of the American navy, dressed in uniform and from vessels stationed at the Washington Navy Yard, witnessed a performance of a popular play. They were seated all through the auditorium and here and there throughout the assemblage, sat their superior officers, many of them accompanied by their wives.

Just as the overture ended there was a stir in one of the boxes nearest the stage. It was caused by the entrance of the President of the United States, the Commander-in-Chief of the navy. Every "Jackie" arose from his seat instantly and his hand went to his temple. The President smiled and

So far, all the cranks have centered their attentions at the Capitol for few have made their appearance at the pressure that is being brought to bear or congress to investigate the cost of transportation. Strange to say, congress has very little knowledge of how the money for this purpose is spent, from automobiles and other vehicles.

Built in 1812, it was fired by the British when g they attacked the Capital in 1814. During the 60's it figured in the Civil war. J and in '98 several companies of soldiers in the Spanish war crossed it to reach Washington from their camps in the south. When the federal troops in 1861 set out to invade Virginia they crossed the Potomac by means of this bridge, and after the battle of Bull Run they re-crossed it in panic. The name of the Long bridge become nationally familiar in connection with that I disaster. During recent years this bridge has been a menace to Washington, its reinforced tiers choking the ton, its reinforced tiers choking the the channel in times of flood, and its low-lying superstructure checking the outflow of ice and drift-wood. It has been replaced by two iron bridges, one for railways and the other for ordinary traffic. The old bridge is a historic relic that will not be mourned.

When the president was away the past summer and the changes were made in and around the White House, the tile roofing of the building connecting the White House proper to the executive offices, was replaced by a concrete roofing as smooth and level as a hardwood floor. The president soon found that when he wanted to take a stroll in the open air, where he could exercise and work out some of the problems that confronted him, and in a place free from the public gaze, the white House, much to the relief of the alert officers at that place who have become so expert in spotting these unfortunates that they are taken in charge almost the instant they enter the gates of the White House grounds.
