The Commoner, Mr. Bryan's paper, will be especially interesting and instructive during the present session of congress. The action of this congress will probably determine the issues upon which the next presidential campaign will be fought.

The above items from republican papers illustrate the style of republican arguments on the money question. One hardly knows whether to attribute the language to ignorance or to a desire to mislead. The silver dollar answers all useful purposes, and is more used by the masses than gold ever was. And why is it gold? Because the government makes it a legal tender for all public debts and for all private ones, too, (except where the contract specifically excludes silver). Money is a medium of exchange and no one objects to receiving a dollar in payment of a debt or in exchange for a purchase if he is able to dispose of it in the same way, and the legal tender enables him to dispose of it. But for the fact that gold bullion is convertible into coin no one would be willing to receive it at a fixed amount per ounce, and when money is scarce and the coin actually needed for immediate use no one will receive gold bullion at the same price that he will legal tender money. The unfairness of the republican argument consists in the ignoring of the effect of law upon money. The law that makes money of a particular kind of metal increases the demand for that metal; the law that makes it possible for a man to convert a given weight of metal into a given sum of money fixes the market price of that quantity of bullion. After legislating against silver and in favor of gold the republican editors chuckle to themselves and even boast with their pencils that silver is not able to keep up with gold. It is difficult to believe that such editorials as the ones above quoted are due to lack of knowledge of the subject, and yet it is more charitable to attribute them to lack of knowledge than to evil intent.

ANTI-TRUST BILLS.

The New York World is authority for the statement that the republican leaders of the senate recently notified the president that "they will pass the Elkins rebate bill, which weakens rather than strengthens the existing laws against discrimination between shippers in freight charges. They will pass the Knox bill, expediting the trials of suits against trusts in the federal courts. They will also pass the bureau of commerce bill, including as it does provisions for a certain measure of publicity for the transactions of all corporations engaged in foreign or interstate commerce, though not so large a measure of it as the president has advocated and as is provided for by the Littlefield bill. But the Littlefield bill, passed by the house last week by unanimous vote, the directors of the senate will not attempt to put through, and they so told the president." And now we are told by no less an authority than William E. Curtis, the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald, that the president has turned the cold shoulder to the Littlefield bill.

THE POOR DEPOSITOR.

According to the terms of the bill introduced by Senator Aldrich, to permit the secretary of the treasury to loan money to national banks on any other security than government bonds and providing that the government shall

A PERMANENT TRUTH.

The republicans who try to justify a colonial policy patterned after Great Britain's rule in India are in the habit of saying that the Declaration of Independence was only intended to accomplish an immediate purpose, namely, the arousing of the people to the necessity of securing independence. It has been denied that the Declaration was really intended set forth any permanent governmental principles.

Those republicans who have been deluded into accepting this statement would do well to read the speech made by Abraham Lincoln at Springfield, Ill., June 26, 1857. In that speech Mr. Lincoln not only pointed out that the doctrine that "all men are created equal" was not necessary for the securing of independence, but that it was presented as an eternal truth and was intended for future use.

In these days of boasted prosperity the republicans may find it valuable to remember that Lincoln spoke of the proneness of prosperity to breed tyrants and pointed out that it was at just such times that the Declaration of Independence and its doctrines were needed. He said:

"The assertion that all men are created equal was of no practical use in affecting our separation from Great Britain; and it was placed in the Declaration not for that, but for future use. Its authors meant it to be—as, thank God, it is now proving itself—a stumbling block to those who in after times might seek to turn a free people back into the hateful paths of despotism. They knew the proneness of prosperity to breed tyrants, and they meant when such should reappear in this fair land and commence their vocation, they should find left for them at last one hard nut to crack."

Minot J. Savage has a brand new theory of suffrage. He would make it a prize to be attained, not upon the basis of money or color or creed or race nor even sex; but would give it to "those persons who have character and intelligence enough to make good citizens." Like most theorists of his type, Mr. Savage neglects a practical consideration of vital importance. He suggests no tribunal to pass upon the requisite degree of character and intelligence. The truth is that only one such tribunal is possible—the voter himself. Let your important laws be subject to the principle of the initiative and referendum, and you will soon be able to distinguish good citizen from your poor one. They would distinguish themselves. The poor one would be too indifferent and lazy to have any opinion on the question at issue and would consequently disfranchise himself.

Arrangements have been made with Mr. Bryan whereby The Commoner can be supplied at a very low rate with the Semi-Weekly Aberdeen Herald, both papers for one year for $2.25. This offer applies to both new and renewal subscriptions, and should be taken advantage of without delay. All orders should be sent to the Aberdeen Herald office

W. H. Brown This signature is on every box of the genuine Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets that cures a cold in one day. A TRUE STORY. Mr. G. W. Morley, of Seattle, was troubled for ten years with catarrh of the head and bronchial tubes. The discharge of mucus was so profuse as to necessitate his sitting up in bed at night to prevent strangulation. As is always the case where there is dropping down of mucus behind the palate, a catarrhal condition of the stomach prevailed and in consequence the whole system was run down. On the advice of a friend he undertook the complete MacKenzie treatment for catarrh. He says now—more than a year since commencing—that he is entirely free from colds, that the nasal passage and throat are free from catarrhal discharges, that his stomach and digestion are in better condition than for years. In fact, he says he is a well man and attributes his good fortune to the MacKenzie "Method."

What is this "method?" It is simply the double treatment of catarrh locally and internally. While the system is renovated and toned and the poison in the blood eliminated, the original point of infection, namely, the nasal passage and throat, is cured and the source of the blood contamination removed.
