The American who happens into Newfoundland will find innumerable causes for interest and surprise. The interior of the island is a wilderness primitive and practically unexplored. A quaint, slow, uncertain railway traverses the heart of the island, but for 500 miles of travel over mountains, through dense forests and by the margins of salt water bays and estuaries not a town is to be seen. Herds of caribou, as tame as barnyard cattle, stand staring at the passing train. From the bosom of lake and river trout and salmon are forever leaping. Brant, geese, wild ducks, grouse and many wild birds that migrate hither in the summer can be found all over the island. Here they mate and breed, and their goslings and chicks make the woods and waters vocal all summer long. Newfoundland, like Ireland, is innocent of snakes or reptiles.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

Chronic Bronchitis. After repeated attacks of acute bronchitis, especially in those past the middle of life, there is a tendency for the disease to become established as a chronic affection. When this occurs a perfect cure is hardly to be expected, unless, perhaps, the patient is able to take up his residence permanently in a warm climate. Even when a cure appears to have been effected the mucous membrane of the bronchial tubes remains vulnerable, and very slight causes will then bring about a return of the trouble.

There is usually more or less cough accompanied by thick expectoration, especially in the morning. Sometimes the chest is sore, and coughing excites a rasping pain. The heavy cough, returning in repeated attacks and finally becoming almost constant, at least from early summer well on into the autumn, at last causes a dilatation of the air-cells in the lungs. This condition—pulmonary emphysema, as it is called—induces a sort of asthma in which expiration is difficult, longer than usual, and accompanied by more or less wheezing.

There is usually little to do for chronic bronchitis in the way of drugs. The so-called expectorants or cough mixtures are needed, as a rule, only when there is a fresh cold caught on top of the chronic condition. At such times the cough may become racking and incessant and call for quieting remedies. Cod-liver oil is almost always good for these patients, unless it spoils the appetite. When it cannot be borne—and when it can also—the sufferer should eat plenty of butter and use cream freely.

When the patient is gouty, a not unusual contingency, an antirheumatic should be adopted. If possible, the colder part of the year should be spent in a warm climate. The dry air of the interior is preferable to the damp east winds of the Atlantic coast; but as the heart may be affected secondarily to the lung trouble or to the kidney trouble which is frequently associated with it, the high altitudes, such as the Rocky Mountain region, are to be visited with caution.

BEES CURE RHEUMATISM.

Most persons have heard that a bee sting will cure rheumatism or lumbago, though few sufferers have actually tried the remedy. Formic acid, derived from bee stings, is now being extensively used as a cure for these diseases.

On the end of the sting, which is about one-thirty-second of an inch long, is a tiny sac containing a drop of formic acid. This sac the bee detaches with the sting after the latter has been deposited in the flesh.

Science has found a way to convert the stings, with their supply of formic acid, into a serum, which, used as an antitoxin or vaccine virus is used, effects a cure.

As the loss of the sting does not interfere with the honey-producing capacity of the bees, the apiarists are finding fortune in the newly discovered cure, and a great impetus has been given to bee cultivation. The stings bring $10 a thousand.

The proprietor of one of the largest apiaries near Philadelphia has more than 1,000,000 bees under cultivation.

TO SAVE CALIFORNIA ELK

Preserve Being Arranged Near San Francisco by a Cattle King.

The California elk is to be saved from extinction. Henry Miller, the cattle king, as to save the elk. He is at work upon a magnificent country home within easy reach of San Francisco. It is called Mount Madonna, because it tops a little mountain of that name; but Elkwood might be a more appropriate designation, for it is about this surpassing country seat that Henry Miller is arranging a preserve, immune from gun and dog and the civilized things which harry forest dwellers, where the California elk may live in peace on the perpetuation and even increase of his kind.

The cattle king will be able to carry out his praiseworthy scheme because already he owns about all the California elk which lift their antlers to-day. There may be 150 specimens of these magnificent elk in California. Henry Miller owns 127. His title to them is of the best. He never bought them with money, but he went into their wild haunts and saved them from the destruction which was wiping their species out of existence.

The elk which he now owns compose what is probably the only herd of American elk which it will be possible to save. In the terribly rough Jackson's Hole country of Wyoming, in Arizona and in a few places further east, the last of the elk are now in hiding. Their final refuge becomes often their death trap. In Wyoming many elk die every winter because the deep snows of their retreat leave them foodless so long that they starve. When they follow the grass line down into the lowlands they fall before the guns of hunters eager for the last of the royal sport of elk stalking.

Tardy game laws have come too late to permit the rejuvenating of their kind in the United States. The elk must soon follow the moose, whose fate was that of the buffalo. Henry Miller would have elk in California when elk are to be found nowhere else in the country.

Miller's elk are on one of his many cattle ranches, the Buena Vista ranch, in the mountains of Kern county, thirty-four miles east of Bakersfield. When the first cattle were driven there the elk were plentiful. Herds of elk grazed and browsed with herds of steer. With the settlement of the country the elk thinned before the settlers' guns. When but a few were left Henry Miller saw that complete extermination was close at hand and he interfered. He chose the best-wooded portion of his land, containing hundreds of acres of timber and thick in places almost impenetrable, and built about the great arena an eight-foot fence. The fence was left open at places, and the natural instincts of the elk taught him in time that it was only within this ideal retreat, always guarded from hunters and intruders, that he was safe. The elk of the whole vicinity took up their home there and their number has increased within the last ten years.—San Francisco Chronicle.

THIS CLOCK A VETERAN.

Timepiece Made Two Years After Columbus Discovered America.

A remarkable clock, over 400 years old, and which still keeps good time and ticks away the seconds and minutes, is owned by H. Halbach, 49 West Neptune street, Lynn.

Made two years after Columbus discovered America, the clock is said to have been constantly in service and after the lapse of four centuries shows but little wear and its wooden works revolve and perform their functions as well as the modern clock made to-day.

Plainly the dates of manufacture and when repairs were made are inscribed and there is no doubt about the authenticity of its history.

The clock, made entirely of wood, with the exception of the weights, stands three feet high and is 18 inches wide and presents a strange appearance with its dial showing old Roman figures, with the quarter and half hours also displayed.

Two figures, each a foot high, stand guard on either side of the dial. One represents a skeleton, and at each quarter hour this figure strikes a bell. The skeleton is supposed to typify the passing of man and the going on of time even after only the bones remain.

The other figure is that of an old man, and in a measure resembles the familiar representation of Father Time. As each hour, half, and quarter is marked by the clock the figure blows a horn. It is an ingenious arrangement. A reed is fixed in the end of the horn, and the dropping of a small piece of wood allows the air to circulate and pass over the reed, making a peculiar sound.

In addition, there is a bell on the top of the clock, and the hours are rung on this, a hammer striking regularly. The bell has a deep, pleasant sound.

Who built the clock is unknown, but for over 200 years it was in the castle Wallenstein, Bohemia, and in 1809 was repaired by Ritter Freiherr von Frederich. For a number of years it was in the castle Kleinska, Bohemia, and when the latter place was being renovated the father of the present owner secured possession and presented it to his son.

The clock is blackened by age, but the wood is hard as flint.—Boston Globe.

CHRONIC SORES

Wheeling, W. Va., May 28, 1903. Some years ago while at work, I fell over a truck and severely injured both of my shins. My blood became poisoned as a result, and the doctor told me I would have running sores for life, and that if they were healed up the result would be fatal. Under this discouraging report I left off their treatment and resorted to the use of S. S. S. Its effects were prompt and gratifying. It took only a short while for the medicine to entirely cure up the sores, and I am not dead as the doctors intimated, nor have the sores ever broke out again. Some 12 years have elapsed since what I have described occurred. Having been so signally benefited by its use I can heartily recommend it as the one great blood purifier.

JOHN W. FUNDIS, Care Schmalback Brewing Co.

Chronic sores start often from a pimple, scratch, bruise or boil, and while salves, washes and powders are beneficial, the unhealthy matter in the blood must be driven out or the sore will continue to eat and spread. S. S. S. reaches these old sores through the blood, removes all impurities and poisons, builds up the entire system and strengthens the circulation. S. S. S. is a blood purifier and tonic combined. Contains no mineral whatever but is guaranteed purely vegetable. If you have an old sore write us and our physicians will advise without charge. Look on diseases of the Blood free.
