TOBACCO satisfied—a clean, small chew. It's the Real Tobacco Chew.
So satisfying and comforting that men are glad to hear about it. And then when they've found it their next impulse is to see that their friends get the good news, too.
A little chew of pure, rich, mellow tobacco—seasoned and sweetened just enough—cuts out so much of the grinding and spitting.
Take less than one-quarter the old size chew. It will be more satisfying than a mouthful of ordinary tobacco. Just take a nibble of it until you find the strength chew that suits you, then see how easily and evenly the real tobacco taste comes, how it satisfies, how much less you have to spit, how few chews you take to be tobacco satisfied. That's why it's the Real Tobacco Chew. That's why it costs less in the end. An excess of licorice and sweetening makes you spit too much.
One small chew takes the place of two big chews of the old kind.
(Notice how the salt brings out the rich tobacco taste.)

IMPORTANT!

NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNERS AND AGENTS.

Below we give a list of all "Local Improvement Districts in which the annual installment becomes delinquent in August, also the date of delinquency and the nature of the improvement. The mailing list now in the Treasurer's office is so far from correct on account of the numerous transfers since the list was made that it is useless to mail notices until the new list we are arranging is completed. In the compilation of this new list you can be of great assistance to us and also insure the mailing of assessment notices to the proper address if you will give us a list of the property owned by you inside the City limits and your mailing address.

MYSTERY SOLVED BY WOMAN'S WIT

How an Innocent Man Was Saved From Gallows.

Many years ago Edward Bixby left a loving wife and their little ones to seek his fortune in the west. Bixby became a prospector in Colorado and bought a claim which he worked with a man of the name of Clark. One day Clark took Bixby to a little pocket of rocks near the mine and showed him where he had placed some articles he did not care to keep on his person. There were some money, a revolver, a gold pencil case, a bunch of keys and a picture of a woman.
"I want you to know where these things are in case anything happens to me," Clark said, and, having covered the pocket with a broad flat stone, left no sign of the concealed articles.
Some time after this Clark was taken ill and, having no relative to leave any property to, made a will leaving his interest in their claim to Bixby, though there was then no great apparent value in the hole they were sinking. Clark recovered, but the will was not destroyed.
One day Bixby left the claim for a day to buy provisions, and when he came back he found that Clark had been murdered during his absence. There was no trace of the murderer, and Bixby was much puzzled as to who had done the deed. Bixby went on digging and finally struck very richable ore. Then he filed Clark's will. He had been suspected of Clark's murder, and now that it appeared he had a motive he was arrested. He could not prove that the murder was committed during his absence, and no one else was known to have an interest in Clark's death. Persons who had sold him and Clark the claim they had worked when it was thought to be of little value, hoping that if Bixby was killed they might get it back, manufactured evidence against him, and he was convicted. The usual efforts were made by his lawyers to save his life, but they were all failures, and finally they told him he must prepare for death.
It was only a few days before the execution was to take place that a young man, an effeminate, apparently half witted fellow, entered a saloon at the county seat where Bixby had been tried and was to be executed. Going to the bar, he called for a drink and in payment offered a revolver. The bartender while examining it noticed scratched upon the handle "Jarvis Clark," the name of the man who had been murdered. The bartender took the revolver in payment for the drink and immediately sent it to the authorities. The young man who had offered it was arrested, and on his person was found two of the other articles

Clark had buried, the gold pencil case and the picture of a woman. The man could give no account of himself, and since Clark had shown the picture to several persons they were enabled to identify it as his property. Bixby was released and the young man was put on trial for the murder of Clark.
Bixby's lawyers advised him to spare no pains to convict the accused, thus vindicating himself, but Bixby declared that his misfortune had shattered his nerves and he would go east to be nursed back to health by his wife. The prosecuting attorney had objected to his being permitted to depart. Bixby, however, got away before any legal move could be made to detain him.
He had had plenty of time to reach a safe distance when the young man who was about to be tried sent for the prosecuting attorney. When that official appeared the prisoner said to him: "I'm not a man. I'm a woman and the wife of the man you hoped to hang. My husband wrote me where Clark had concealed certain articles. I came here, found them and produced the revolver for the purpose which has been achieved. I had arranged it all with my husband's official order the prisoner to be examined by a woman, who found her claim to be true. "And now," said Mrs. Bixby, "I believe the picture of the woman Clark hid with the other articles to have something to do with the murder. Release me, and I will endeavor to find out."
Mrs. Bixby was released and set about the task she had assigned herself. It was not long before she discovered the picture to be that of a woman who had left her husband for Clark. The errand woman's husband was arrested for the murder, but he was not brought to trial. The sympathy of the people was in favor of one who had simply avenged a wrong in a way that they considered legitimate. The prisoner confessed that he had long looked for Clark and when he found him gave him a fair chance for his life. But, fearing arrest on charge of murder, he had fled as far as possible from the scene of his revenge.
There was a great deal of sympathy for Bixby, who had come so near being hanged for a murder he had not committed and a great deal of admiration for the woman who had saved him. He remained in hiding till his wife had uncovered the real facts of the tragedy, then, on an invitation from the people of the region, he returned, took up his work on his mine where he had left it and became rich.
The outcome of the case had a salutary effect on judicial procedure in the community, the accused being given opportunity to prove innocence.

DECISION.
We waste a deal of time and brain force in making and remaking decisions that should be made once for all. When some duty is to be performed, the sooner it can be accomplished and put away as finished work the better.

ATTRACTIVE LINGERIE GOWN.

Futureistic lace motifs are sprinkled thickly over net, which is also barred with insertion and edged with lace about the hem of the skirt. The blouse ends in a wide belt, with futuristic blue flowers showing bravely upon it. The collar and cuffs are of lace and the blouse of net, the entire costume worn over a pink satin princess slip.
A Problem.
Rankin was chuckling.
"What's a matter?" asked Phyle.
"I was just thinking of something my boy asked me."
"What was it?"
