Congress and the President

It is unfortunate that the policy of this government as to submarine warfare should come before congress at a time when every member is playing politics with a view to re-election, and most of them more anxious about the opinion of hyphenated Americans at home than the effect of the wrangle upon the peace and dignity of the nation. The attitude of the president is not new. The question was raised through diplomatic channels in August, 1914, as to the rights of a defensively armed merchant vessel in our ports. The question was raised by Great Britain. It was contested by Germany, and our Government stated its position with reference to the representations of that Government. It made it at a time when the submarine question had not become acute, at a time when there was as much coolness and deliberation as could well exist on the part of the Governments concerned, and especially of our own Government. It was made at a time when William J. Bryan was Secretary of State—and nobody will ever accuse him of having been a war jingo, and no one will claim there is any probability that he ever will be one.

The first paragraph of that statement was:
"A merchant vessel of a belligerent nation may carry armament and ammunition for the sole purpose of defense without acquiring the character of a ship at war."
Our government went on to state what will be regarded as indications that a merchant ship was armed only for defensive purposes, and went on to say that: "Port authorities, on the arrival in any port of the United States of an armed vessel of belligerent nationality claimed to be a merchant vessel, should immediately investigate and report to Washington on the foregoing indications as to the intended use of armament in order that it may be determined whether the evidence is sufficient to remove the presumption that the vessel is and should be treated as a ship of war. Clearance will not be granted until authorized from Washington, and the master will be so informed upon arrival."

That statement was made on the 10th of September, 1914, and every nation on earth and all citizens of the United States had a perfect right to assume beyond cavil or question that under this special investigation as to whether or not a particular ship was armed simply for defensive purposes was to be determined by the government in Washington, before clearance was issued and we must assume and conclude that it was lawful, legal, proper, and right for any person to engage passage on such a ship, and that no man in doing so was himself reckless of his own life or of the interest of his country because he trusted in the good faith and honesty of our own Government in its investigation thus made as to each and every vessel to which clearance was issued.

This statement was in reply to a memorandum from the British embassy at Washington, which complained of Germany having entered upon a policy of arming merchant ships as commerce destroyers and claiming the right to arm and equip such vessels in neutral harbors, and saying that in consequence of this the British Admiralty had been compelled to arm a certain number of British merchant ships for defense only.

On September 19, 1914, the state department wrote the German ambassador and enclosed a memorandum giving the status of armed merchant ships in American waters. This entire subject was threshed out nearly eighteen months ago and congress was in session almost all the time the correspondence was going on, and it was made public, yet there was no uprising in the nation in contravention of the position taken by our government at that time and published to the world.

On May 13, 1915, the famous note was written by Secretary Bryan, which said:
"American citizens act within their indisputable rights in taking their ships and in traveling wherever their legitimate business calls them upon the high seas and exercise those rights in what should be the well-justified confidence that their lives will not be endangered by acts done in clear violation of universally acknowledged international obligations, and certainly in the confidence that their own Government will sustain them in the exercise of their rights. . . ."
"Expressions of regret and offers of reparation in case of the destruction of neutral ships sunk by mistake, while they may satisfy international obligations, if no loss of life results, can not justify or excuse a practice of which it is to subject neutral nations and neutral persons to new and immeasurable risks."
"The Imperial German Government will not expect the Government of the United States to omit any word or any act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens and of safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment."
"The Government of the United States therefore desires to call the attention of the Imperial Government, with the utmost earnestness, to the fact that the objection to their present method of attack against the trade of their enemies lies in the practical impossibility of employing submarines in the destruction of commerce without disregarding those

A BIG BUSINESS

There is a reason why we are able to make such low prices on our Retreads and Repairs on auto tires and tubes. Low overhead expense and volume of business.

We have retreaded over 400 tires in less than one year. These treads carry a guarantee of 2500 miles and less than 7 per cent of these tires have been returned for adjustments; few of these returned have gone under 2000 miles; we have retreaded as many as 19 tires for one company and several have from 5 to 7; many of these retreaded tires have gone from 7 to 8 thousand miles on Jitneys and hired cars with overloads.

We only retread or repair such tires as in our judgment will more than repay the owner for the amount spent.
