The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has issued a pamphlet called "Burning at Stake in the United States," in which it gives a record of the public burning by mobs of five men during the first five months of 1919 in the States of Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and Texas.

William Trotter of Boston, representing the National Equal Rights League, on the 5th sent to Sir Eric Drummond, secretary-general of the League of Nations, a long petition asking that certain clauses be inserted in the League of Nations Covenant. These clauses, the petition said, were designed to secure for American Negroes and other racial minorities "full democracy."

A campaign of education with the view to bringing about public opposition to lynching is announced by the Southern Publicity Committee of the Southern Sociological Congress. The program of the campaign provides for the sending of speakers to conventions actively to enlist religious, educational and other leaders in the movement; and a thorough study of the causes of lynching, on the results of which a conservative program of education and law enforcement may be worked out.

Down in Washington a colored man, John W. Lewis, is constructing the Whitelaw Apartment House, a building costing over $110,000; this building is being constructed with colored people's money, and all of the work save the plumbing and electric paraphernalia is being done by colored men. Mr. Lewis went to Washington with Coxe's army, and twelve years after carrying the hod on the True Reformers' Building he purchased it. Later he organized the Industrial Savings Bank and the Laborers' and Mechanics' Realty, both large and successful institutions in the capital.

Three members, a majority of the public welfare board of Omaha protesting against the appointment of a Negro woman as a member of the board to succeed Frank A. Kennedy, State labor commissioner, upon the grounds that they did not believe it possible to find a Negro woman fitted to hold the position, and that such an appointment would not be for the best interests of the Negro citizens, were overruled by Mayor Smith and the appointment made. Mrs. Julia Hudlin, a widow and former Y. W. C. A. worker in Chicago and New York, secured the position upon the recommendation of the leading Negro citizens.

MEASURING THE DAY'S WORK

The most difficult task of the coal commission seems to be to discover how much coal cutting is a fair day's work for a collier. It appears that in a good "place" a man will cut four tons of coal in a shift, yet the yearly output of coal per man was only 220 tons last year.

It is rather interesting to glance at other forms of work, and to see just how much other toilers do in a day. Take plowing, for instance. The man who, with a single plow, turns an acre in a day, is well earning his money. In completing his task, he will have walked and guided the plow about fourteen miles.

Harvesting in the old days used to be slow work, and the man who cut by hand an acre of wheat was doing well. With the modern horse-cutter and binder one man, with the assistance of two "shockers," has been known to cut and bind twenty acres of wheat in one day.

At one time the setting of three hundred bricks was considered a day's work for a bricklayer. But at piece-work, and using a special soft mortar, a man has been known to lay 1,400 bricks during an eight-hour day and to continue this average for days on end.

Packing fruit is no easy task. Take oranges, for instance. These average one hundred and fifty to the box, and each fruit has to be separately wrapped in paper. Seventy boxes is considered a very fair day's work, but a man has been known to pack one hundred and twenty boxes in a ten-hour day. He had to handle and wrap 18,000 oranges to accomplish this task.

The work our men did in France when marching in full kit is far beyond that of an ordinary laborer. The world's marching record is held by a detachment of the London Rifle brigade. In April, 1914, these men—sixty-two in number—marched from London to Brighton, a distance of fifty-two miles, in fourteen hours and twenty-three minutes. They were in full kit, and carried rifles, a total weight of forty-two pounds, yet not a man fell out.—Answers (London).
