

MISS JULIA GRANT IS NOW A PRINCESS

The Daughter of General Fred Grant Marries a Royal Russian.

THE CEREMONY PERFORMED TWICE

For Those Noblemen, You Know, Are Such Slippery Fellows—Wedded at Home of Potter Palmer.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 25.—Miss Julia Grant, daughter of Gen. and Mrs. Fred Grant, was married here last night to Prince Cantacuzene, of Russia. The marriage was at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Potter Palmer.

NEWPORT, Sept. 25.—The church wedding of Prince Cantacuzene and Julia Grant took place at noon today at All Saints' Protestant church. The ceremony was followed by a reception and a wedding breakfast at "Beaulieu," Mrs. Potter Palmer's villa.

The presence of a number of United States army and navy officers lent a military atmosphere to the nuptials. Among those present were: Gen. Miles, Meritt and Corbin. Others present were Chauncey M. Depew, Mrs. Nelson Miles, Gen. and Mrs. F. V. Greene, Gen. and Mrs. Grant Wilson, and Bourke Cochran.

Today's wedding ceremony bore a marked contrast to the Russian service of yesterday. The chapel was beautifully decorated. On the altar and chancel were arranged a large number of baskets filled with white orchids and floral wedding bells. Large garlands of bride's roses depended from bells and formed a bower which almost hid from the bridal party as it stood at the altar. The bridal procession included only Miss Grant and her escort and ushers. There were no bridesmaids, nor maid of honor. Miss Grant was gowned in a white dress, severely cut, but of the richest white satin, and wearing a veil of tulle and carried a bouquet of stephanotis and lilies of the valley. She wore gifts of the bridegroom in her corsage, including an ornament of diamonds and enamel, and a rope of pearls.

The prince was in the full uniform of a chevalier, and was brilliant in red and gold.

Accompanied by Horace Potter, his best man, he met the bride and ushers at the altar. Then followed a simple Episcopal service. The wedded pair left the church immediately for the Palmer mansion, where they received congratulations.

Late this afternoon the prince and princess will leave for New York aboard the yacht Narada. On Wednesday they will sail for Europe. They will spend the winter with the Princess Estotes, in Odessa.

SEATTLE KANGAROO ON A SUNDAY LARK

Gives His Pursuers Points on Long Distance Jumping.

FINALLY CAPTURED IN MID-AIR

A Novel and Sensational Scene Witnessed on Howard Avenue Last Night by a Crowd of People.

A kangaroo hunt in Seattle is the latest local sensation. The exciting chase took place last night in the vicinity of the Columbia school grounds, and attracted a large crowd. Bert Pillings, a young man living at 715 Howard avenue north, was crossing one of the vacant lots near the Columbia school, when he was hailed by a couple of breathless, large-eyed small boys. They had seen something they knew not what. "It's got big eyes and long ears, an' it's legs like a mule; and, say, mister, it CAN jump!" This was the ludicrous description they gave of a strange beast that crossed their path on the school grounds.

Pillings' curiosity was aroused by this, and by a further account of wild gambolings and wonderful feats of leaping. He hastened to the spot, and saw what he readily recognized as a young kangaroo. The chase commenced. The small boys were enthusiastic, but not wise. They endeavored to spear out the young stranger from the Antipodes, who kept well ahead of them by a series of leaping 15 or 18 feet hops. Finally the beast was cornered, by chance. The hunters, whose number was now increased by the addition of several small boys, a couple of men, and a liberal sprinkling of dogs, drew in upon him. There was a moment of breathless suspense, as young Pillings leaned forward to lay hands on the game. Then, of a sudden, the kangaroo vanished. Pillings' hands clutched thin air. The spot where the beast had crouched was vacant. The crowd looked at one another in hopeless bewilderment, when a small boy uttered a yell, and pointed to the rear of the yard, where the quarry was vanishing around the corner of the schoolhouse. He had jumped over their heads. Then Pillings thought of a plan. He stationed himself behind a corner of the building. The chase came his way. As the kangaroo passed, he threw himself upon him and managed to grasp a hind leg. After a vigorous struggle in which the young hunter suffered from the strong hind legs of the brute, he secured his game, and led him home triumphant, ahead of a long procession of men, boys and dogs.

Last night the kangaroo held an impromptu reception in the Pillings barn. He received many and varied comments from his guests. He welcomed them calmly, with the exception of the dogs, with whom he seemed anxious to have a closer acquaintance. The man who knows it all was there. He came toward the last, when the crowd was thin. He looked on the little Antipodean a moment, then said: "Humph! Just as I thought. That's no kangaroo; it's a prairie wolf."

It was ascertained later that the little stranger had escaped from the home of Capt. Campbell, of Seventeenth and Madison. He will be returned today. Meantime the Pillings' back yard is thronged with the youths of the neighborhood who seem to believe with Artemus Ward, that the kangaroo is "an amusin' little kuss."

PICTURES OF CAPT. DREYFUS

The British Biograph Company, despite the utmost endeavors of the French government, succeeded in getting photographs of Dreyfus exercising in the prison yard at Rennes. To do this they rented a house overlooking the yard, and erected a wooden scaffolding on the top. So far they were left unmolested, but the sight of a camera on the scaffold caused the authorities to at once raise a high screen round the yard, and in this way effectually shut the prisoner from view. Mr. Orde, the representative of the company, thereupon covered his scaffolding with tarpaulin, and apparently gave up the attempt. Behind the tarpaulin, however, close watch was kept for three days, and when at the end of that time the officials were convinced that the danger was over, and Dreyfus was allowed to exercise without the screen the camera was at once got to work. Unhappily the click of the instrument drew the attention of the jailers, and the prisoner was hurried to his cell, after the machine had been working something less than 16 seconds. Great difficulty was experienced in getting the film from Rennes to Paris, and it has taken the Biograph Company three weeks to circumvent the police and postal authorities to get it out of France. It, however, safely arrived in London. A picture of Mrs. Dreyfus was not so lucky, and the film was seized by the military police. Happily, however, a duplicate had been secured, and this is also being exhibited at the Palace. The whole story is an admirable illustration of Anglo-American pertinacity.

PINCUS WAS CHECKMATED

Attempted to Open a Gambling House Without Permit

The gambling houses now doing business in Seattle are prospering. They are filled to overflowing nightly, but still they fear competition. It has been stated frequently in the Star that John Considine is the king pin gambler in the city, and that he holds the key to the situation. He is reported to have said that no more gambling houses shall be opened in Seattle. The gambling trust of which he is reported to be one of the heads is autocratic. Ed Pincus, who was employed at the Standard, was recently discharged for some violation of the rules of the house. Pincus, who has the reputation of being a crack gambler, decided to be "in it," and open up a game of his own. He visited Councilman William McArdle, who runs a saloon directly over the People's theater, and proposed to lease a vacant room in the rear of the premises for that purpose. McArdle saw no objection, and it is said the deal between McArdle and Pincus was closed.

Considine was not long in learning of Pincus' coup, and it is alleged began immediately to place obstructions in the way of his late employer. He went to McArdle and told him that he would take his McArdle's lease away, compelling him to seek other quarters. Considine holds the lease on the building, and McArdle sub-leases it from him. McArdle saw the point and ruled Pincus out. As a result of this action, it is said Considine has reduced the rent of McArdle's saloon from $150 to $50 per month.

Pincus, it is said, is not yet discouraged. He will fight the "trust," and, in partnership with "Shorty" Shaw, will open lottery games in Seattle some time next week.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 25.—The street railwaymen's union today presented its grievance to President Kilgore, of the Consolidated company, with the choice of granting the demands or having a general strike. The demands were presented by a committee of men not employed by the company. President Kilgore declined to talk with anyone who was not in his employ.

WILL BRYAN TALK IN KENTUCKY FOR GOEBEL?

The Latter Accused of Participating in a Plan to Kill Free Silver in '96.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 25.—In view of ex-Secretary Carlisle's statement recently, that Mr. Goebel had been a party to the plan to kill free silver as an issue in 1896 in Kentucky, and his assertion that Mr. Goebel's visit to Washington in 1896 was solely to secure Mr. Carlisle's co-operation to this end, it is still more doubtful whether Mr. Bryan will adhere to his purpose to take the stump for Mr. Goebel.

It is believed here that Mr. Bryan had already regretted his promise to Blackburn to enter the Kentucky fight, and that he will take advantage of Mr. Carlisle's assertion and withdraw his promise and keep his hands off the campaign.

The Democratic leaders, moreover, have begun to suspect strongly that Mr. Goebel is not sincerely converted to free silver. It is thought that these leaders have advised Mr. Bryan against entering the state, and will urge him to cancel his engagements.

Ex-Senator Blackburn today admitted that he did not know when Mr. Bryan would begin his Kentucky campaign tour. He is billed to make his opening speech in this state October 2, but he also has a date to speak at this time in Texas. Blackburn wrote to Mr. Bryan today for definite information as to when he will begin his Kentucky tour.

Burglars Dynamite an Illinois Bank.

JOLIET, Ill., Sept. 25.—The Exchange bank at Frankfort, Will county, was blown open early this morning by a big charge of dynamite that shattered the building. With their booty of $1,000 stowed in a large leather bag the thieves boldly walked down the main street of the village flourishing revolvers, and appropriating a hand car, started down the railroad track and escaped without the slightest trouble or resistance.

The robbery aroused the surrounding country for several miles. Early this forenoon a posse was organized among the farmers, who will scour the outlying districts, and if captured it is possible the robbers will be summarily dealt with on the Georgia plan. With shotguns, pitchforks and ropes the search is being conducted, and a terrible vengeance is promised if the robbers are caught before the hot blood of the rural swains has had an opportunity to cool off.

JACOBS WILL NOT SUE Judge Orange Jacobs will not sue the Post-Intelligencer Publishing company for libel. Today he issued an order to Attorney General Vance to drop the case. This will not come as a surprise. It has been known for some time that both parties to the case wanted the matter dropped, and the one thing needed was a go-between. Sam Piles brought the affair to its present head.
