SOMETHING MUST BREAK

The strain of mind under which the manager of this store has labored during the past few weeks, and the near approach of the time that is set as the limit of paying the sum of money demanded by the New York concern, makes it absolutely necessary that something be done immediately. There is to be no more hesitancy about making a price sacrifice that will bring in the money. It is simply a question of getting this sum together as quickly as possible now. No stone will be left unturned to make the last few days of this sale an unusual event both as to price and quality in clothing, hats, shoes, etc., and the determination to raise money at once regardless of cost or merchandise.
