

STATE LEGISLATURE HELPED BEER GARDEN PLAN ALONG

Unfortunately for the good citizens who are protesting against the proposed beer garden at Madison park, and trustfully relying upon the state law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within a radius of two miles of the University of Washington, the legislature of 1895, which passed the act, had a fraternal regard for the interests of the saloon element and the Seattle Electric Company.

The saloons kindly excepted certain parcels of land from the provisions of the act, and innocently enough, no doubt, Madison park, where the electric octopus has for years been anxious to have beer gardens established to attract the car fare paying multitude, is within the exempted area.

The law referred to is found in Pierce's code, page 979, and reads as follows:

"Section 1—It shall be unlawful to sell any intoxicating liquors, with or without a license, on the grounds of the University of Washington or within two miles thereof, excepting south half of section 22, township 25, range 4 east, and any license granted for the sale of such intoxicating liquors within said area shall be void."

The act prescribes fine and imprisonment for its violation. It effectually prevents the establishment of saloons at Fremont and Latona, where their existence might be tolerated, but allows them to flourish at Madison park, if a city council controlled by the brewery trust so wills.

JACK MADE HIMSELF A WOODEN LEG

ALFRED ROSE.

PORT TOWNSEND, Wash., June 8.—Alfred Rose, despite a wooden leg, is credited with being as handy a seaman as can be found on the Pacific. A sailor since boyhood, he did not know what to turn to when he lost his leg by accident four years ago. While on board ship, the hawser took a turn about his left leg. There was a great strain on the rope and in the twinkling of an eye the member was severed a few inches above the ankle.

In a few months Rose was again on deck. The wooden leg shown in the photograph is his own contrivance. By the aid of the large hook at the lower end, the iron pin below the knee and two small pins, one on either side of the leg half way down, Rose goes aloft, furis sail and performs all the dangerous tasks generally require of an able seaman. He takes a back seat for some of his mates, and every master on whose ship he has worked in the last few years counts him so good a man that he is always in demand.

Rose was paid off in this city recently. Within twenty-four hours he signed again, this time on the British ship Lismore, bound for Australia. He is an American, born in Cleveland, O., and his first work afloat was on the Great Lakes.

Hohenschild's Stock Arrives in Seattle

The stock of the Hohenschild Dry Goods Co., which was sold by the receiver to Stone, Fisher & Lane, arrived in Seattle last night, via steamer Flyer. Today a small army of clerks are busy getting the merchandise in shape for the big sale which begins next Monday. Mr. W. R. Sibley, the superintendent, declares this to be the best and biggest purchase the organization ever made, as the stock invoices $25,000 and the price paid will allow the concern to sell it at half that figure. The full particulars will be found in the Sunday Times.

SMOKE LAWS DEFECTIVE

MAYOR BALLINGER BELIEVES A NEW ORDINANCE SHOULD BE PASSED

That the present ordinance against the smoke nuisance, two in number, might be construed as contradictory and therefore illegal by any person who might desire to avoid obeying them, is the opinion of Mayor Ballinger after looking over them carefully. Since beginning his investigation of the smoke nuisance, he has examined the laws carefully and has concluded that there is a loop hole in them.

HE IS NOT PREPARED TO SAY THAT THE ORDINANCES AS THEY NOW STAND CANNOT BE ENFORCED, BUT HE BELIEVES ANY PERSON WISHING TO AVOID THEIR PENALTIES MIGHT HAVE SOME GROUNDS FOR ARGUING AGAINST THEIR LEGALITY.

Ordinance 5503, passed August 22, 1899, declares that the owners of all new buildings must install smoke consumers "when so notified by the building inspector." A later ordinance, passed July 2, 1901, prescribes a fine of $100 for any person whom complaint is made for allowing so much smoke to escape from his building that it becomes a nuisance.

The grounds on which a person against whom complaint is made under the latter ordinance might win out in court would be that he had conformed to the former ordinance, because although he had not installed a smoke consumer he had not been ordered to do so by the building inspector. The ordinance provides that he shall do so only when the inspector so notifies him, and, moreover, it does not even specify to what extent the consumer must "consume" smoke.

Under these conditions it is not unlikely that the city authorities and the sub-committee of the conference committee of improvement clubs, which has the matter in charge, will ask the council to pass a new ordinance modeled after some of the better ordinances now in force in other cities. It is possible that, as in other cities, the city boiler inspector will be given the duty of looking after the enforcement of the proposed new law. Smoke inspection would be only incidental to boiler inspection.

City Boiler Inspector William Murray is of the belief that local manufacturing firms could undoubtedly get rid of all smoke if they were willing to go to the necessary expense.

"Different methods of getting rid of the smoke must be adopted under different conditions," he said yesterday afternoon. "The use of powdered coal and automatic stokers are the chief methods employed. The chief trouble with local manufacturing establishments is that they work their boilers to the fullest capacity. The Post street power house of the Seattle Electric Company, for instance, is provided with automatic stokers, but when the plant is running at its full capacity they are not adequate. The only manner in which the trouble can be ended is to install more boilers also provided with the automatic stokers."

CUPID VS. MONEY BAGS

Miss Cunningham.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 9.—Beautiful Violet Cunningham, one of the held girls, is playing the leading part in a drama all her own, and this is no press agent yarn. It's the simple tale of a man's love of a maid, a wealthy and unrelenting father and the maid's determination to become his daughter-in-law. When the held show came to San Francisco several weeks ago Miss Cunningham captured the heart of Geo. Whittell, Jr., whose father is a millionaire. Now, George has a faculty for falling in love with chorus girls and papa and the moneybags have been compelled on one or two occasions to come to the rescue. But this time he has a young woman with spirit to reckon with, one who scorns his moneybags and wants his son as much as the latter wants the beauty. Between snorts of rage, papa denies that his son is engaged to the chorus girl, but the latter coyly exhibits a diamond ring as proof of her contention. San Franciscans acquainted with the career of young Whittell are watching the battle between the beauty and the father with much interest. Miss Cunningham is an expert fencer and has frequently handled the fells at amateur theatricals in this city.

SUES FOR A GUITAR

Mrs. S. A. Barnett Makes a Church and Former Pastor Defendants in Replevin Case

The Battery Street Methodist church and Rev. H. D. Brown, once its pastor, are defendants in a sensational replevin suit brought in the superior court today by Mrs. S. A. Barnett. Mrs. Barnett alleges that Mr. Brown, who is now head of the Washington Children's Home society, has converted to his own use a valuable guitar, which she left in his care, as her pastor, two years ago. She demands, in her complaint, that Mr. Brown and the church either return to her the guitar, or pay her $500 damages.

Mrs. Barnett's story is that, while a member of the Battery Street church in 1902, she decided to make a long journey. She prized her guitar very highly, she claims, as it had belonged to her son, who had died some time before, but she did not wish to take the instrument with her.

She alleges that Mr. Brown and his wife urged her to leave it at the parsonage. She was given a receipt for it, but states that when she returned from her trip and demanded the instrument, it was not forthcoming.

"The whole affair is most unfortunate," Mrs. Barnett said yesterday, in discussing the case with a Star reporter. "In June, 1902, while my husband was pastor of the Battery Street church, Mrs. Barnett, one of the congregation, brought her guitar to us and asked us to keep it. Reluctantly we agreed to do so, but only for two weeks. We did not hear from her for some time, but finally she wrote us from some place in the East, asking us to box up the instrument and send it to her."

"At that time we were just moving, and were very busy. We asked the pastor who succeeded Mr. Brown to keep the instrument until he should receive directions from us what to do with it.

"The guitar has mysteriously disappeared. The last time we saw it, it was in a closet in the Battery Street church parsonage. It is not there now. The son of the new pastor says that a man came for the instrument, claiming to have been sent by us, and the boy insists that he gave it to him.

"We have detectives working on the case, and are not prepared to state now the result of the investigation."

Mrs. Barnett is represented in her suit by Attorney F. C. Dormitzer.

Big Ocean-Going Dredger Filled With Mud and Sunk at Tacoma

(Special to The Star)

TACOMA, June 8.—Lying in water up to her decks, the ocean-going dredger Pacific, belonging to the North American Dredging company, is sunk in the main city channel at the foot of Twenty-first street.

By the breaking of the suction pipe in the hold of the dredger, the steamer rapidly filled with water shortly before midnight and sank. On board at the time were thirty-five men, including the crew at work and those in the day shift, but all escaped, although some of them lost their personal property.

Early this morning the fire tug Fearless arrived on the scene to assist in making preparations for raising the sunken craft.

While Superintendent Green and Foreman Matson absolutely refused to make any statement whatever, it was learned that the cause of the accident was the bursting of the big 24-inch suction pipe.

Although the engines were at once stopped, the back flow from that portion of the pipe leading to the tideflats, where the mud and gravel from the core of the channel were being deposited, soon filled the hold. The immense craft slowly swung around and went to the bottom. Only a portion of her upper works and her smokestack are now visible above the surface of the bay.

NO MYSTERY ABOUT IT

William Bigler's Intention to Leave the City Was Well Known

Willlett & Willlett, the lawyers who defended William Bigler during his recent trial for insanity in the superior court, which preceded the expose of the Hillman City "Foundlings Home" by The Star, deny that there is anything mysterious in their client's disappearance from the city, as stated by a local newspaper. They say they knew he intended to leave the city, and that they have his present address.

Mrs. Harp, owner of the "Home," with the four orphans, on whom she bases her claims for extensive charity, has returned to Hillman City. The Charity organization is still looking up her record and planning to take her orphans from her. Some action will probably be taken in the course of the next few months.

ARMY MEN ON JUNKET

General Chaffee and a party of army officers, including the quartermaster general, will leave Washington late this month on a tour of inspection of the quartermasters' offices and army headquarters throughout the country; also to make a general inspection of all forts west of the Mississippi river. The party will reach the Pacific coast on July 5 and begin an inspection of the forts along the northern boundary. On July 18 the party will reach Seattle and remain here until July 24. During the time they will inspect the forts and army headquarters on Puget sound. All will leave Seattle in the afternoon of July 24 for Portland. The tour will take about fifty days.
