

Every Auto in Seattle Violates Law Every Day

Why not have a little more stringent automobile regulations, and a whole lot more effective enforcement of the regulations we have?

Every day every automobile operator in Seattle is breaking the laws. Occasionally a few men are brought into court and assessed small fines.

The speeding goes on. Waiting down the Seneca st. hill, the Denny way hill, down Broadway, along the boulevards, the motorists drive at top speed, while children are playing in the streets and women and old people and crippled persons crossing the streets are in daily danger.

Every few days brings some accident more or less serious to the attention of the police. There are scores of minor accidents which they never hear of.

Some of these days there'll be a big horrible auto accident, which will center the attention of everyone in Seattle on this growing evil, and the council and police will get awfully busy for a few days.

Why not take the step in time—before this accident? For it will surely come unless something is done.

Here is a case in point: H. A. Maynard, 3840 Aurora st., came limping into The Star office this morning to tell how he was knocked down and thrown 30 feet by a flying auto one night a week ago.

The driver of the car only checked his machine long enough to turn his head around, then speeded on faster than ever.

Maynard was alighting from a Phinney av. car at 39th st. and Phinney av., when the car came tearing down Fremont av. behind him, and on the wrong side of the street. Maynard did not even see the car before it hit him.

Maynard was lucky that he was not killed or crippled for life. As it was he was bruised from head to foot.

The people on the car called to the driver of the auto to stop, but he waved his hand at them and opened up the high speed clutch.

The police have no idea who he was. The number of the car could not be seen in the dark.

Maynard was lucky. Maybe the next man won't be so lucky.

THIS IS THE WAY NORDICA REALLY LOOKS

"Let me snap me if you'll take in my new Paris hat," said Verica, the singer, on the deck of an incoming liner in New York the other day. "The hat is my only excuse for being photographed." And here the picture is, Paris hat, veil, Nordica and all, just as she wears in everyday life.
