Wherever the railroad has vouchsafed a station,
And many a place where it's not,
Way out on the fringes of civilization
Or close to its busiest spot,
Wherever a retailer's present to treat with,
His various samples to scan,
Why, that is the place you are certain to meet with
And notice the Traveling Man!

He's easy to spot, for you cannot mistake him,
There's a smart sort of tilt to his lid,
And a dash and a devil-may-care-ness that makes him
A person whose trade can't be hid;
Way back in his eyes is a luminous twinkle
And his smile's on a generous plan;
Each move and each word and each laugh and each wrinkle
Proclaim he's a Traveling Man.

Despite all the horrors of countryside taverns
Which follow a wearisome ride,
The rooms which are nothing but dreary old caverns
And the dishes eternally tried,
He keeps up his cheer, he's a blithe, sunny spirit,
He's built on the joyous plan;
The latest in stories or styles—you will hear it
From the lips of the Traveling Man.

He's gay and he's flippant, a trifle flirtatious,
But true, just the same, to his own,
The helpless ones find him both gentle and gracious,
The other kind leave him alone;
Through all kinds of trouble and worry and weather,
He tends to the work of his clan;
He's a link in the chain that keeps mortals together,
Here's how to the Traveling Man.

The Making of HOLSUM is an Exact Science
WE have under our absolute control, Madame Housewife, all the things that make bake day with you a matter more or less of "luck."
We know that our flour is the best. Not only do we buy the best the market affords, but we test it ourselves to make doubly sure that it is up to the HOLSUM standard. Likewise the milk, water, sugar and yeast that go into HOLSUM must measure up to the exacting HOLSUM standard.
The making of HOLSUM is in charge of experienced master bakers. But clean, automatic machines do all the actual work. Giant Mixers tend to the "mixing" and "kneading" as you call it. Their steel hands never tire, before the dough is thoroughly mixed.

HOLSUM Bread
is always finest quality

The chemist has given us the complete control of the yeast germ and the "rising" process—always a matter of worry and uncertainty to the housewife. We are master of temperatures and conditions.
Fresh from the Oven in its dainty waxed wrapper. It comes to you with all its cleanness and purity intact—to do away with the need of home baking and save you all this heat and work. Stop home-

After the HOLSUM dough has risen to the proper lightness, it is automatically cut and shaped into loaves—then placed in a huge oven when the heat is just 550 degrees and where the loaf is baked through and through.
HOLSUM is Wrapped in its dainty waxed wrapper. No longer any excuse for this wrinkle producing, worrisome task. Decide now to give HOLSUM a good, fair trial in your home. 10c a loaf of all grades.
