PUBLIC MORGUE BODIES

Even the deputies, veterans of their grim profession, scanned the long row of yellow, upturned faces with a feeling of depression. The nothingness of man was forcibly depicted. There were some who, while they breathed, were big, strong, healthy fellows. Others, their feeble bodies racked with pain, welcomed the arrival of the great reaper.

"Natural causes," said the coroner. There isn't room for all the bodies in the space allotted to this purpose. A door was removed to gain additional space. A second door was taken off to be utilized as a slab. An upturned steel receiving cage, as well as its cover, answer a similar purpose. Some of the bodies are being held until relatives can attend to their transfer to undertaking parlors. The pauper dead will be cremated. The morgue has the following bodies: Louis Zab, 22, fractured skull. Died Sunday at the city hospital. Richard Swagart, 24, Sunday at the city hospital. Paralysis. Three babies.

One is that of a woman. Three are babies. The corpses have accumulated during the past week. Some died by their own hand. One man was brutally slain for his money. Another was shot down as he attempted to perpetrate a crime. An Indian woman killed herself by excessive drinking. A drunkard paid the penalty for over indulgence by a fall, a fractured skull and death. A son of Nippon tumbled off a ship into the bay and was drowned. Save for the babies, an 18-year-old boy was the youngest victim. Out of a job and hungry, he sought the Open Door Mission. At night he lay down to sleep alongside of scores of others. And he never awakened.

THE CONFESSIONS OF A WIFE

I CAN'T UNDERSTAND SUCH DEVOTION CHAPTER LXXV I'm going to give up all the rest." I noticed after the first few months that Annie did not seem so smiling and I asked her what was the matter. "I'm out of a job, Miss," she answered, "and I've been thinking that I'll get a little more washing to do until he gets a new one." I recommended her to some of my friends and forgot all about her after that, for, with my hurried courtship and marriage, I had rather neglected Annie's affairs until she appeared before me with that bruised and discolored eye. "How's Tim?" I asked. "I can't be working"—and then the flood gates opened. "Tim hasn't worked but six months since we was married, Miss. Not but what we could get along all right while I have my hands and my washboard, but Tim has got runnin' with the gang and he spends most of his time over to McFlinn's saloon." "Where does he get the money to spend there?" I asked, although I knew, of course, that she gave it to him. "Well, Miss Margaret, it's no meself that would have him shamed before his friends, so I give him 50 cents a day to spend." "Don't you know that is foolish as well as wrong, Annie?" I asked. "Of course, I does. I should just turn him out doors, for he is strong and well and kind work as well as me, but, Miss Margaret, I think I'd die if I didn't have him to put his arm around me and say: 'You're the prettiest girl in the ward yet, Mavourneen,' and he is always so kind except when he has a bit too much. You see, when you get used to having your own man it's mighty hard to get along without him." "Saturday night he came in about 9 o'clock and asked me for more money and I wouldn't give it to him. I told him he might take me to the picture show instead of spending my money on the drunken wretches about McFlinn's saloon. The reference to MY MONEY made him rage and he—he struck me—but he was sorry right away and said he did not deserve as good a wife as me. "He felt awful when he saw it get black and blue." "Well, did you finally go to your picture show?" "No, Miss Margaret, me eye looked so bad that I couldn't, so I gave poor Tim some more money to have a little fun with his boys. It was too bad to kape him in the jail because I wasn't fit to be seen." "It was too pathetic to smile at, but I could not help wondering if I would still be devoted to Dick under the same circumstances under which poor Annie worked for 'her man.'" (To Be Continued Tomorrow.)
