CUSSED HARD JOB TO FIGURE SEN. CUMMINS

Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa is a cussed hard fellow to figure.

You could've seen him Thursday morning in one of those nice, fine chairs at the Washington hotel, just before they were going to whirl him about the boulevards, and you'd've made up your mind he was a quiet, gentle sort of prairie chap, his hair being gray, and his mustache drooping at the ends like he didn't give a hang how he looked.

What a Red Tie!
Then you'd see him get up, and you'd've noticed his pants were neatly creased, his black coat fitted snug, and would you believe it? He had a red tie!

Cummins spoke at the Commercial Club at noon, and he's going to speak to the Young Men's Republican club at noon Friday, and everybody's figuring what he's going to tell the republicans.

Voted for T. R.
You see, they're talking about Cummins as presidential timber, and everybody's wondering about him because he proved such a hard cuss to figure in 1912. Seems like he didn't like Taft, and he wasn't stuck on Roosevelt, Cummins' being an insurgent. So he ran for president himself. When he didn't get the nomination, and they grabbed it for Taft at Chicago, and Roosevelt started a new party, what did Cummins do? He said he'd stick with the republican party, but vote for T. R. Could you beat it?

Likes to Insurge
That's just like Cummins. Started out as an engineer. Was a good one, too. Then he studied law. He became a corporation lawyer, and what do you suppose? He turned right around and told all about the corporations, and the people elected him governor and senator, and he's been a rip-roaring progressive republican ever since.

He's in Seattle for two days, accompanied by Mrs. Cummins.

What They Ask Cynthia Grey

If the letters continue to pour in in answer to "J. A. P." as they have this morning, fear that unfortunate bachelor will be compelled to hold up his hands before many days. It is absolutely impossible to print all of the letters, and they are all so good that it is difficult to leave any out. Following are a few of the letters:

Dear Miss Grey: As I am a working girl, I would like to reply to "J. A. P." by telling my little story. I am naturally fond of sewing, cooking and housework, and so, when I started to high school, I took up domestic science. I progressed very well with this work and liked it very much, especially designing, which taught us the art of home decorating—how to make the home attractive and beautiful, which was something new to me.

But after the first year I began to think of the future. What was I to do when I left school? I could not remain dependent on my father, and, anyway, I did not want to sit around and wait for a man who might never come. I wanted to live, to get a perspective on life, and to find myself and my place in the world. So I changed my course and took up stenography.

Since leaving school, I have worked for two years. I have had chances, and if I had been dependent on some one for support, I should probably have accepted one, but today I am thankful that I did not, for I can now see how ungrateful they would have been to me. If the right man comes now, I will be better able to recognize him and to appreciate him and better equipped to help make a happy home, for I have learned some things in the working world.

I have learned the value of money; it would be hard for any one to live within a hard-earned and moderate income and not learn that. I have learned to organize and systematize my work, whatever it may be, and I have learned that I must analyze my failures and change them to successes. Of course, I have only learned the beginning of these things. It would take a lifetime to perfect them. But I have made a start, and if I never meet the man with whom I think I can make a happy home, I hope to find some other useful work to do in the world.

Of one thing I am sure—money does not bring happiness, and love alone does not bring lasting happiness—but it lies within ourselves, and we can be happy, no matter what the circumstances may be, or we may be unhappy under the most ideal conditions imaginable. A MODERN GIRL.

Dear Miss Grey: I wish to say a few words in reply to the boob bachelor who signed himself "J. A. P." There are several letters in your column, written by bachelors, which I read and swallowed, but this one is the limit. I wish I could take you around, Mr. "J. A. P." to at least a dozen homes right in my neighborhood, and I think I could convince you there are more good women than men, or a few to begin with—it wouldn't do to go too strong in the beginning, as you don't believe there are any at all. I wonder where you have been keeping yourself all this time, to meet only such women as you speak of. I wish to inform you that I, and also other women whom I know, have solved problems in keeping house in these hard times that would surprise your grandmother. I make pillow cases, sheets and underwear for my children out of flour sacks. I bleach them, hemstitch them and make them up real nice, and I don't send them to the laundry, either. The trouble with the majority of your kind is that they don't appreciate such a woman when they get her.

You speak of the younger generation. I suppose you mean girls from 15 to 20. You say they can't sew a button on properly. I wish to inform you that every school teaches domestic science, and they are bound to learn these things. My little sister, 16 years old, lives home with her mother, and does all the baking and helps mother with the housework, besides taking care of a little girl 2 years old whose mother has to go out to earn bread and butter—which, by the way, is the result of having for a husband a drunkard who spends all or what little he can make for "booze." MRS. H. E. H.

Dear Miss Grey: I can't help but wonder where "J. A. P." has lived and what kind of women he has been thrown with, or, rather, sought. This constant cry, "Why aren't girls like they used to be?"—well, it gets on my nerves! Among my acquaintances I don't believe I can pick out one young woman who is not fully as good a cook as her mother. They can nearly all make their own clothes, and, what's more, most of them can go out and earn the money to buy the cloth, while men like "J. A. P." are sitting back and waiting, I suppose, for some nice girl to come to him, explain her accomplishments, and beg for a chance to help spend that 175 a month.

It is true that there are some silly women, as there always have been. And right here, too, let me say that too many men turn from the sensible, worth-while girl to some empty-headed little simpleton who knows how to flatter their vanity. The present young woman has taken her bearings from this fact and acts the fool in order to please the men, while by herself she learns things which really count and use them.

Dispute it as we like, woman's one aim in life is to please man. F.

BANKERS ARE SUED; CHARGE CONSPIRACY

James Dunlap, trustee in bankruptcy for the now defunct La Conner, Wash., bank of W. E. Schrickler & Co., Thursday before Judge Dykeman began a suit to recover $270,000 from the Seattle National bank.

Dunlap bares an alleged conspiracy into which the La Conner bankers and Jacob Furth, E. W. Andrews, Daniel Koelber and E. V. Ankeny of the Seattle National are alleged to have entered in an effort to keep the condition of the La Conner bank secret from its stockholders and the public.

The La Conner bank closed its doors, April 14, 1912, indebted $225,000, it is alleged.

Charges Conspiracy
He charges that the bank became insolvent as early as 1905 thru misappropriation of funds by W. E. Schrickler, and that the discovery of its insolvency was not made until January 1, 1911.

At that time, he alleges, the La Conner bank was indebted to the Seattle National, its correspondent, $120,000. In order that this might be paid, he declares, the Seattle National officials conspired with the La Conner bank to furnish funds to keep the tottering bank on its feet.

The Scheme Big Judgment
The scheme was to keep the condition of the La Conner bank secret for the purpose of securing depositors, he says.

Dunlap asks a judgment for $220,000, the amount of claims allowed against the estate of Schrickler & Co., and $50,000, the cost of administering the estate.

Jacob Furth was indicted, tried and convicted in this connection on a criminal charge of conspiracy. After his death, the supreme court reversed the superior court decision.

STRIPPED AND ROBBED, SAILOR BLAMES WOMAN

PORTLAND, June 3.—Bound, gagged, blindfolded, stark naked, and almost suffocated from being buried in a bin of oats, Jack Kling, 22, a sailor, who claims he was the victim of a robbery in which a handsome young woman figured, was found in a barn on Council Crest today.

At the emergency hospital Kling said he had taken an automobile ride with a man whom he knew as McArthur and a fashionably dressed young woman of 18, introduced by McArthur as his daughter.

The woman, Kling said, forced a bitter substance into his mouth. Kling said he was overcome by the drug and when he came to his senses he was lying on the floor of the barn, securely tied.

Again losing consciousness, Kling said he knew nothing until rescued, after being removed from the bin.

He had been stripped of his clothing, $65 in cash and a watch.

BRINGS FRISCO FAIR TO SEATTLE

"I've brought the exposition home with me," says Richard Seelye Jones, former executive commissioner of the state of Washington at San Francisco, who is back in Seattle, after being removed from the state's payroll, after a wrangle with the women commissioners from this state, Mrs. W. A. Holzheimer and Mrs. H. W. Allen.

Jones comes with the official 1915 exposition pictures, which start at the Metropolitan theatre Thursday night for a four days' run, accompanied by a lecture by the former commissioner.

"The pictures offer a regular trip to the exposition for those who won't be able to visit the world's fair," says Jones.

WAR IMMINENT IN OIL COMPANY; SLATER ACCUSED

TACOMA, June 3.—An ultimatum has been issued by stockholders of the Crescent Oil Co. to John C. Slater, Emery C. Williamson and other members of the board of trustees, to "come thru" with explanations for several alleged breaches of faith. The time limit for said explanations is set for next Monday night, after which, if the situation is still unsatisfactory to the stockholders, court action may be taken to oust the present managers.

At a meeting, last night, of 175 stockholders, C. Christopher read a long list of charges, generally accusing Slater, Williamson and others, whom Slater and Williamson are alleged to represent, with an attempt to gain control of the company for themselves. It is charged that the trustees know there is oil in the well, and are therefore holding back its operation until they should get control. While Slater also claims there is oil in commercial quantities in the Crescent well, he denied any attempt on his part to juggle the stock of the company or to deprive stockholders of their rights.

The Seattle Svea Male choir is one of the pioneers of the Pacific coast, having participated in like festivals at Portland in 1905 and San Francisco in 1907.

DESECRATOR OF FLAG FINED; WILL APPEAL

Mrs. Ellen Raymond, gray-haired desecrator of the American flag, convicted before Justice Gordon Wednesday afternoon, will carry the case to the higher courts. Her counsel has given notice of appeal.

Judge Gordon imposed a $200 fine. The flag incident occurred at the Mercer island parental school three weeks ago, during regular Sunday drill. Mrs. Raymond was forcibly ejected from the grounds after making defamatory remarks about the flag.

In court the only witness in her behalf was one of her four children, a 12-year-old daughter. Both mother and daughter stoutly denied the charges.

Women from various patriotic organizations, many of them wearing or carrying the Stars and Stripes, crowded the courtroom.

John C. Hindle, a barber, who killed his baby while drunk, on February 25, has been sentenced to serve from one to 20 years in the Monroe reformatory for manslaughter. Hindle's defense was temporary insanity, because of heavy drinking.
