'BILL' SHEPHERD LEARNS A FEW THINGS ABOUT HEAVY ARTILLERY FIRE AT FRONT

By Wm. G. Shepherd
United Press Staff Correspondent
(Copyrighted, 1915, by the United Press. Copyrighted in Great Britain.)

HEADQUARTERS OF THE BRITISH ARMY, NORTHERN FRANCE, July 27.—(By Mail to New York)—This is Frederick Villiers' seventeenth war. Everywhere we go in the English lines some officer says to him: "But I suppose you've seen all this sort of thing before."

And Villiers, who has painted war pictures all over the world, says: "It's all new to me. I'm a babe at this new game of war." It is not all new to him, of course. Villiers' first campaign was in 1876. In those days no one touched off a cannon until the enemy was in sight. It was like aiming a rifle. But this afternoon we looked on at Twentieth Century artillery firing.

The British artillerymen were at attention with their guns, when the officer in charge showed us a map. "You see, we're in this section," he said, "and we're going to shoot at this spot."

How Artillery is Fired
He indicated a point four miles distant in the German lines. Farms and roads and a village and the English and German trenches lay between us and the target.

"There's a ruined farm house there," he went on. "German officers are always hanging around, and we have to touch it up every now and then."

"Fire!" he said. The shell drilled its tunnel thru the sky and the British officer some miles ahead of us, who saw the shell explode, telephoned back that it had fallen short.

The guns were changed. The man fired again. This time the message came that the shell had gone a little too far.

The British artillerymen tinkered with their gun as delicately as watchmakers adjusting a jeweled watch, and then the gun boomed out again.

Some Perfect Shooting
"It hit the farm house," was the message that came back over the telephone.

It was 100 per cent shooting, for the two test shots are almost always necessary in range finding.

The twentieth century British artillerymen were showing us how well they knew how to shoot.

But there's another point in this twentieth century warfare that is even more important, and that is to keep in mind where NOT to shoot.

Later we saw an astonishing example of this. We were in the English trenches at Ploegstreet wood. Villiers had trudged down the trench before me.

Thru a periscope, we looked across the grass and saw the German trenches, not a block away.

Scattered rifle firing was incessant. Bullets whistled over the trench now and then, but it was a quiet sunshiny, lazy summer day.

You Close for Comfort
The English soldiers sat about smoking, talking or reading.

Suddenly, from behind us, came the yell of an English shell. It passed over us.

"It hit" was the word the periscope man sent down the trenches. Thru periscopes, we saw a black cloud hanging over the German trenches. There was a gap in their line of sand bags. I was glad that we could not see into the German trench.

What was going on at that moment hidden from our eyes, we could not know. Surely there were dead and torn men, lying in a bloody mass of shrapnel.

The same afternoon sun that was warming us looked down on that sight which we could not see.

The three hundred feet between us and them was like the width of the world. And that same English shell would have done the same thing to our English trench if some expert artilleryman had given a certain screw a twist too much to the left.

Speeding 40 feet lower at the end of its journey of perhaps four miles, the scene of the bloodshed would have been in the English and not in the German trench.

This shooting was unknown six months ago, but in Gen. French's artillery parks it has become a common thing.

"I thought I knew war," said Villiers, "but I would not have known a thing about artillery possibilities if I had not seen that shell fall on the German trench."

EVERY DOGFISH HAS USE NOWADAYS
FREEPORT, N. Y., Aug. 20.—Dogfish are so numerous in Long Island waters that they are cluttering up the fishermen's lines. No use had been found for them until Roger Carman cut the two little horns off one of the fish and used them for needles on his phonograph.

Carman says these dogfish horns reproduce the records perfectly.

INDIANA SMITHY MAKES A FORTUNE
LAFAYETTE, Ind., Aug. 20.—Matthew McNulty, who was at one time known as the "village blacksmith" of Lafayette, has retired after being in the business for nearly 60 years. He estimates that he has shod more than a half million horses and mules in his career.

He was a horsebreaker during the days of the Wabash and Erie canal and had the contract for shoeing the mules that provided the power for the boats between Toledo and Lafayette. McNulty accumulated a fortune of $10,000 and says he will now retire to his farm.

IT'S AN OFF DAY FOR COUNCIL
Our city council looks like the hole in a doughnut right now. Councilman Marble is in the Olympics, fishing, for a few days. Councilman Hanna is ill. Councilman Fitzgerald is in Bellingham. Councilman Dale is sitting with the equalization board. Councilman Erickson will leave Saturday for a joint to California. Otherwise, there's a full membership.

MY DEAR, IT'S A FACT! BARE LEGS ARE FASHIONABLE THIS YEAR

Beauty and bare legs! On the avenue and at the bathing beach bare legs are fashionable this summer. For promenading there are cute little roll stockings, as shown in the accompanying picture, while at the beaches they don't bother with any.

Have you a hole in your stocking? Don't worry! Roll 'em down as far as your shoe tops, or, if you like, take 'em off entirely—then go promenading!

BARE LEGS ARE FASHIONABLE THIS SUMMER!
My dear, it's a fact! On Fifth ave., at Newport and elsewhere you see bare legs. A young thing comes tripping along, you look, and then you don't know whether to run or to stop her and hoarsely whisper that you think—something has broken.

But don't! She's only keeping up with the styles by wearing 'em down—to her shoe tops. And so with the present style of short skirts, passers-by get a generous view of BARE LEGS. The roll stocking is the thing. You don't believe it? Well, look at the accompanying photograph. There's only one drawback to the roll stocking. The wearer has to find another place for the "bank roll."

At the beaches nobody wears stockings this summer. Fair bathers don't even bother with socks. Short-skirted bathing suits and slippers—and nothing between, that's Fashion's edict.

It's rather hard on the girl whose legs are skinny, for there isn't a ghost of a chance to "fake."

Less than 170,000, which is one-fifth the usual number, left their homes in the United States to tour Europe during the last year. The June exodus, which is generally large, was less than 7,000.

Landlubber Has Fine Plan to Knock Out Submarines

Would Hang Torpedo Between Two Aeroplanes, and Go a-Hunting Over Ocean

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20.—Eccentric and would-be inventors are bombarding Washington with thousands of "inventions" to protect the United States against all sorts of enemies that travel in or on the water, overland or in the air.

More than 3,000 letters offering "devices" to swat the enemy have been offered to the war and navy departments within the last few weeks.

One "inventor" has written to several congressmen asking them to urge the navy department to adopt his plan for beating the submarine.

This man, who resides in an interior state, says that if

Uncle Sam will have two aeroplanes hooked together with a wire 100 yards long, and then drop from each a heavy piano wire, with a torpedo on the end, and let them fly about the ocean and strike submarines the trick will work.

MAIL BY AIRSHIP

DENVER, Aug. 20.—An airmail route between New York and San Francisco will be established within a year, Postoffice Inspector Daniels predicted today. Such a route, he said, would make impossible the delaying of important mail matter by heavy snow or by any similar physical obstacle.

TAKE THEM AWAY!

Saturday will be the last day of the semi-annual clearance and nothing but fall goods will be shown thereafter, so the balance of the season's stock goes at these
