WILL VON HINDENBURG ESCAPE FATE THAT BEFELL NAPOLEON?

Germany's Great Drive for the Heart of Russia Bears a Striking Resemblance to Napoleon's March 103 Years Ago; Is Nicholas Leading Kaiser's Forces Into a Huge Trap, Just as the Czar's Generals Did a Century Past?

Will their fate be similar? Map showing Napoleon's advance to Moscow in 1812 and the battle line of Germany's present great drive towards Petrograd and Moscow.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—The great German drive for the heart of Russia—admitted to be the most wonderful, sustained offensive movement of the European war—HOW WILL IT END? The Teutons have forced Russia to fight within her own borders for the first time in 103 years. They are driving for Moscow—and Petrograd.

Will they succeed or will they fail as Napoleon did in his famous campaign in 1812? Just as they did to Napoleon, the Russians in their retreat now are taking everything of value with them, leaving behind only a path of devastation.

The present German drive began in May with the spectacular Teutonic march thru Galicia. The Russians who twice before had repulsed the Germans before Warsaw had, combined with their campaign in East Prussia, rolled down thru Galicia.

Lemberg and Przemysl had fallen before them, their lines had drawn near Cracow and the German border and an invasion of Hungary was threatened.

Step by step he forced the Russians to give ground to retrace the path they had cut thru Galicia. Przemysl was recaptured by the Austro-Germans June 3 and by the end of the month Lemberg also had been retaken and the Russians were now fighting on their own territory.

Then the German armies of the south, their work in Galicia well done, halted while preparations were made for the next stage of the marvelous campaign.

Great armies had been assembled to the north and those early in July began pressing down on the Russians from that direction. A vigorous offensive was opened in the Baltic provinces, the Germans attacked from point to point along the East Prussia border, and with Hindenburg directing the general operations a determined drive began in the region of Przasnysz, a city 50 miles to the north of Warsaw. The city was captured July 16.

tion, the key to Warsaw on the north, was approached. In the south the Russian lines of communication in the Lublin region were threatened.

Finally the Teutons forced their way past the Blonie line, southwest of the city, pushed across the river Narow, below Ostroienka, and began the great assault on Warsaw, which fell into their hands Aug. 19.

Germany now made an offer of a separate peace, but the czar spurned it, while the Grand Duke Nicholas continued his magnificent retreat across Poland.

Pouring across the Vistula, the Germans have continued to retake back the Russians, and, since the first of this month, have been trying to bring their northern and southern forces together like the jaws of some giant pincher.

So far Nicholas, by masterly retreats, has managed to evade getting caught in the mouth of the German machine, but in doing so has been forced to let important strongholds fall to the Germans.

and from that point divide and demoralize the Russian armies, but the Russians, outnumbered, frustrated his plan by retreating.

The Russian generals of that day, as Nicholas is doing now, left nothing behind. Corps and towns were burned and Napoleon's huge army, unable to live on the country, had to face the great problem of bringing up their own supplies.

Again and again the Russians refused to stand and give battle and meanwhile as Napoleon got further and further from his base his army suffered. STARVING, SICK AND WORN OUT, HIS MEN DIED OFF BY THE THOUSAND.

Finally Napoleon and his now badly depleted army reached Moscow to find the city in flames.

The czar refused to treat with him.

Winter was approaching, there was danger of his being cut off, and finally, towards the end of October, Napoleon was forced to begin the retreat from Moscow, that between the rigors of winter and the harassing attacks of the Russians, practically wiped out his army, and sent him in disguise to Paris.

SET OUT TO DRIVE 'EM OUT OF GALICIA

To get at the Russian armies in Poland—and Warsaw—it was now necessary for the Germans to run the Russians out of Galicia.

Efficiently and methodically Von Hindenburg set about doing this. Field Marshal Von Mackensen received his orders and began driving against the Russian rear.

POUND WAY TOWARD WARSAW

Thus the combined armies of Austria and Germany pounded their way toward Warsaw from the north and south. Before this vast movement the armies of Grand Duke Nicholas were forced to give way.

By July 19 the Germans had pushed the Russians back to the line of the Narew river and were within 20 miles of Warsaw. The fortress of Ostroienka was taken and the Novo Georgievsk fortification.

GERMANS FACING PERILS OF WINTER

First Ivangorod and now Brest-Litovsk across the Bug river, has fallen, while further north Bieles-tok, Osawotz and Kovno have been captured until now the Germans are beating down on the Nieman river and England's huge field headquarters of the Russian army.

But it is more a question now whether German efficiency will enable her to face successfully the still, long drive across Poland and the rigors of a winter campaign probably necessary before she can pour troops into Petrograd and Moscow, or will the Russians, leading the enemy into a trap, be able with the help of winter to cut off and wipe out Hindenburg's armies?

The latter was the fate of Napoleon in his campaign in 1812, which strikingly resembles that of the Germans today even to the offering of peace terms after he had gained Russian soil.

In May, 103 years ago, his negotiations with Russia for an armistice on England having failed, Napoleon began his drive for Moscow. He had an army of 600,000, comparatively small nowadays, but huge then, and 1,300 cannons and 18,000 horse with siege trains.

With his force divided into three groups, Napoleon, operating from Konigsberg and Kovno began pushing across Poland while down in Galicia, he was assisted by an Austrian army.

He planned to march on Vilna

Tells of the Disease

"The horrors of war," he said, sitting in the manager's office at the Orpheum, "are not in the trenches. Many of the boys there are enjoying better conditions than they did at home during times of peace.

"But the real horrors you will find back of the battle line, where the diseases from the front sweep back over the defenseless non-combatants, in the hospitals and in the homes and cities that have felt the searing hand of the enemy."

Along the Marne, where some of the fiercest fighting between the French and Germans took place, he said, the battlefields are vast, desolate cemeteries, stretching as far as the eye can reach.

Thousands of Graves

"Along the roadsides, on the hills, back of each ruined house and outbuilding," he said, "you can see grouped together little mounds, four or five in a place, and surrounded by four posts and barbed wire, surmounted by crosses, some white, some black.

"Under the white cross lies the body of a French soldier, under the black is a German. On the cross-arm is written the number found on the wristband of the dead man by the burial party. When the war is over the dead will be taken home, the body identified and given a more decent burial.

Give Fruit to Wounded

"In the bombarded cities one may see whole blocks of buildings furrowed thru by shells, half torn away, the other half standing. From the streets you can still see pictures hanging on the walls of rooms once occupied by those who will never return.

"We stopped off the train at one railway station in France, where the wounded were being placed aboard, bound for the hospitals. We had a basket of fruit.

"Mrs. Bray went among the poor wrecks of men, some of them with arms shot away, some with a leg missing, giving them each a portion of the juicy fruit.

Cheered for Americans

"It was pitiful to see them biting huge chunks out of an apple or an orange, and then the miserable, fever-stricken fellows would rise up in their cots and cry, 'Give us Americans.' My wife gave away all the fruit we had, and more that we purchased near by, and I rushed into the train and brought out half a gripful of cigarettes.

"When we pulled away from the station Mrs. Bray sank into the seat of our compartment and cried, 'We could do so little,' she said."

Bray declared the impression that food is becoming scarce in Germany is a fallacy; that even the tourists are able to get the best of delicacies at any place in Europe.

Canadians Are Toughest

"The Germans say the hardest men they have had to meet are the Canadians," he said. "But even the Canadians, armed only with light rifles, cannot hope to fight against the big guns of the Germans.

"German soldiers draw a marked distinction between the English and the Canadians. They have received the greatest opposition from the latter, thousands of whom have fallen in the front ranks, where they were placed by the English commanders.

"It is the horror of the ages. Thru it all we should remember that the

SAW A BLACK CAT

ST. PAUL, Aug. 27.—That black cat superstition has been thoroughly confirmed.

James Jensen was bowling down the residence district on a motorcycle, when the black cat crossed just in front of him. One moment later he crashed into the rear of Ed Fisher's automobile.

COMPANY ASKS FOR MONOPOLY ON MILK SUPPLY

John B. Shorett, an attorney, Thursday afternoon laid before the city council the proposal of persons not as yet mentioned, to take over Seattle's entire milk supply on a 20-year contract with the city.

All milk would be collected into a central milk depot, inspected there under the supervision and regulation of city officials, and from there distributed with the elimination of route duplication, which at present keeps the milk cost up.

The city would receive 2 1/2 per cent of the company's gross receipts. The concern would be known as the Seattle Municipal Milk company. Under the terms of the agreement the city would have the option of taking over the plant at five-year intervals, upon giving six months' notice.

The proposal will come before the council Monday.

"We will furnish a modern, up-to-date central plant or station, at which all milk to be sold shall be received, tested and treated, so as to meet the requirements of the health department of the city with reference to the quality and healthfulness of such milk," says the proposal; "also provide in said plant free space in which the city may install and maintain its laboratory, equipment and operators for the testing, inspecting and supervising of all such milk."

Reputable business men and ample capital are behind the project, Shorett says.

LET YOUR BOYS PLAY WITH DOLL, MOTHER ADVISES

LUGENIA HANCOCK PROSSER

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 27.—Give your baby son a doll to play with and cut his chances of ending up in the divorce courts, in half.

"The inherent instincts of fatherhood can be fostered the same in the boy child as the inherent instincts of motherhood can be fostered in the girl child."

Mrs. Eugenia Hancock Prosser of this city advocates these doctrines, and is planning to rear her handsome two-and-one-half-year-old son on the system.

"Give your boy a doll to play with," she advises her best girl friends who have little children to bring up. "It will make him, not only an admirable son but a good father, someday.

"We give our boys toy engines. We give them drums and rifles to install in them the martial spirit. But we shame them when we see them playing with a doll in fear that they may become 'mollycoddlies.'"

SLEEPS IN LAP OF WOMAN; ARRESTED

H. R. Hansen, of Seattle, was arrested Thursday afternoon after he had slept in the lap of an Everett woman while the Interurban car on which they were riding sped 20 miles.

He entered the car when it was crowded.

He took a seat beside the Everett woman, and dropped into a doze.

Then she found he was sitting on part of her dress, and she was unable to move. He finally fell over into her lap. She tried vainly to arouse him. As she entered Seattle the conductor, G. M. Conolly, telephoned the police.

The conductor will appear against Hansen.

HERE IS A FIRM THAT SHOWS ITS FAITH IN SEATTLE

The Pacific Outfitting Co., Inc., under capable direction of several managers, has demonstrated that Seattle appreciates and supports a credit house.

The Pacific Outfitting Co., a business that demands more than ordinary tact and diplomacy, deserves much commendation in the fact that it has grown from a very small store into one of the leading cloak and suit houses in the city.

It is conceded that many of the people who now own their homes would never have been able to accumulate a necessary amount had they not been able to buy on the installment plan, and pay for their home while enjoying its privileges.

In the same class are those who find it convenient to pay for their apparel in the same way, and since such houses as the Pacific have placed credit on the business basis as it has, patrons may, without loss of dignity, and without embarrassment, open an account and pay on easy credit terms.

The Pacific Outfitting Co., first located on Pike st., were soon forced to move into larger quarters, and for a time did business on Second ave., between Union and Pike. Shortly afterward the increasing patronage made necessary a larger establishment, and the address was changed to the southwest corner of Third ave. and University st.

Now again the Pacific Outfitting Co. is enlarging. They will remain in the same location, but with an addition which will allow a frontage on Third ave. of over 40 feet. The display windows will be in proportion, permitting a more effective showing of goods.

With the larger floor space the store will be doubled and the office and sales force not only increased, but will be kept to the highest standard possible, that the accommodation and convenience of the customers may be the first consideration.

The interior of the store is finishing in the natural wood, mirrors alternating with the paneled doors of the stock rooms. Fitting rooms on the same floor will make possible the best of service with the least effort of customers and employees, and for the comfort of the public a drinking fountain is installed in the center of the Third ave. entrance.

The building has been done under the supervision of Contractor W. J. Grady & Co., after the plans drawn by Architect Mr. H. B. Pierce.

Mr. Max Lipman, the present manager, is one who always has time to personally meet and greet his customers, and it is largely through his tireless energy that the Pacific has reached its success.

Realizing that their success lies in the hands of the people of Seattle, the management of the Pacific Outfitting Co. thanks the public for past favors and patronage, and extends a cordial invitation to partake of the comforts and advantages of the new store.

THEATRE MAN HERE TELLS OF HORRORS HE SAW IN EUROPE

Fat, fair and forty, and a regular 42-centimeter feller, that is G. E. Bray of New York, assistant manager of the Orpheum circuit, who is in Seattle fresh from the battlefields of Europe.

For two months this summer Bray and Mrs. Bray toured France, Belgium, Switzerland and Germany. Bray was on his vacation, and as a pastime and because he couldn't help it, being an old newspaper man, acted as the accredited correspondent for the New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Tells of the Disease

"The horrors of war," he said, sitting in the manager's office at the Orpheum, "are not in the trenches. Many of the boys there are enjoying better conditions than they did at home during times of peace.
