THE GODDESS

INTRODUCING
EARLE WILLIAMS as . . Tommy Barclay
ANITA STEWART as . . . The Goddess
Written by GOVERNEUR MORRIS
One of the Most Notable Figures in American Literature
Read the Story Here; See It on Screen at the Alhambra

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS
After the death of John Amesbury, his prostrated wife, one of America's greatest beauties, dies. The beautiful 15-year-old daughter of Amesbury, now orphaned, is kidnapped by Professor Stilliter, the agent of The Interests, who brings her up in a paradise where she sees no men. She is taught by "angels" that she is in "heaven," and that her mission is to reform the world. At 18 she is thrust into the world, where the agents of The Interests are ready to pretend to find her.
Meanwhile Tommy, a playmate of the Amesbury girl, feels her loss keenly. Shortly after the disappearance of the little girl, Tommy is adopted by Mr. Blackstone, chief of the money trust.

CHAPTER IV.
(Copyrighted, 1915, by Star Co.)
Mr. Barclay couldn't help being fond of Tommy, but in some ways Tommy proved an awful disappointment to him.

Adopted into and brought up to be an aristocrat of wealth, he had no interest in money except to spend it.
He was much more interested in horses and boats and dogs and shooting than in any of his patron's financial affairs. He went to boarding school and played on the football team and the hockey team and the baseball team. He took prizes in everything that he engaged in, except studies. It was the same with him at college. He spent half of his time winning trophies for his college and the other half making friends for himself. When he graduated, Mr. Barclay tried to teach him banking, railroading and a few other trifles all at once. Mr. Barclay had no patience with the idea that it is best to begin at the bottom and work up. He believed in beginning at the top. Tommy did his very best to make good.

Mr. Barclay did not expect too much of Tommy, and soon saw that what little he did expect, he was not likely to get. But he was very fond of him and tried to make the best of him. Tommy spent all his leisure time playing polo or tennis or dashing off on hunting trips, and some fourteen or fifteen years after this story opens he became very much interested in Miss Mary Blackstone.
He hadn't forgotten the little Amesbury girl. He never would forget her, but what is the use of a little girl who lives in heaven to a young man who doesn't?

Tommy often dreamed about her still. As he grew older she grew older, and the heaven in which she lived and was educated by the most scientific and philosophical of all the saints and angels became more and more sophisticated and less like the palace scene in a comic opera.
But Mary Blackstone did not live in heaven, did not wear a halo, did not play a golden harp, or sit around and look as if burning would not melt in her mouth. She lived in a low white house near Southampton, L. I. It had gardens full of gigantic boxwood, and it had so many fluted columns to hold up its veranda roofs that Tommy, with his distaste for figures, was never able to count them.

Mary Blackstone rode horses, played tennis and swam in the surf as well as a strong and courageous boy. Tommy never knew whether she was more attractive in athletic clothes or when, as she expressed it, she was dressed to look like a real lady. Every phase of her appearance charmed him. Unfortunately, these same phases and everything else about her charmed a good many other men.
If she liked Tommy better than anybody else she was in no hurry to say so. She didn't want to cut herself off from all the other young men, whom she liked almost as well, Carlton Fitch, for instance.

Carlton Fitch was Mr. Barclay's nephew, and in some ways was a great favorite of his uncle's. He took so much interest in his uncle's banks, railroads, mines, etc., that you might have thought that he expected to own them some day. He was not only a nominal director of a great many corporations, but a very real director in the affairs of half a dozen of the more important. He never neglected work for play. Some people admired him tremendously; others said they wouldn't trust him around the corner with a five-cent piece.
Outwardly he and Tommy were always friendly and polite to each other, even after they had become open rivals for Mary Blackstone's approval, but inwardly, each had a contempt for the other, and, in addition to this, Carlton Fitch was jealous of Tommy, for he had expected to inherit almost the whole of Mr. Barclay's money, and since Tommy's adoption it looked as if he was going to inherit very little of it indeed. He would be rich, anyway, but he was very greedy for power.

Mentally, they were poles apart. Tommy, who he loved to spend money, was given to asking foolish questions about the ways and prerogatives of capital. He couldn't understand why the majority of people in this world have to be poor and dirty and unhappy. Why the real producer should have such a small share in what he produces. He did not go into these questions very deeply, but just enough to be something of a socialist at heart and to feel a certain contempt for people to whom the collecting of money was the most important thing in the world. Perhaps he only took up socialistic ideas in order to amuse himself at the expense of those who maintain opposite theories, for he didn't go into anything, except games, very seriously. He did feel, however, that a world containing so many able minds it was a shame that so much poverty and misery should be allowed to exist.

"You couldn't live in a house that had a dirty attic and a filthy cellar and tuberculous rats behind the wainscoting," he once said to Barclay. "How then can you live in a city, nine-tenths of it full of dirt, misery and disease?" To which Barclay had answered: "In my own house I am the master. But in the city, if I wanted to clean it up, they wouldn't let me."

"Who wouldn't?"
"Why, the very people who make it dirty."
But Tommy was not altogether convinced, and he loved to argue. When he got arguing he got carried away and often said things which he didn't mean, but which troubled Mr. Barclay deeply.

Mr. Barclay had planned in complete detail a splendid destiny for Tommy. The boy was to be one of the world's greatest names and powers; its richest man. To the millions that he was to inherit from Barclay, the Blackstone millions were to be added by marriage. Why, in case it had even developed that government by the people is a failure when that government should at last collapse, as in his heart Barclay thought and hoped that it would, Tommy Barclay might aspire to be anything, dictator, a king.

For a long time Barclay kept on hoping against hope, and attributed Tommy's failures and wrong-headed principles to his youth and high spirits. Then one day there appeared an interview which Tommy had given to a reporter, between the chuckers of a polo game, and Barclay threw up his hands.
Talking with the wild carelessness of youth, Tommy had given it as his opinion that in the great coal mine strike in Western Pennsylvania, then at its height, the miners were really fighting for their existence, and that the owners were oppressing them.

To Barclay such opinions uttered by his adopted son amounted to treason. And he had the impulse to abandon all those hopes which he had entertained for the boy's future, and he did abandon them.
First he sent for his nephew, Carlton Fitch. To this one he made no elaborate explanation of his changed attitude. He said, "Carlton, I want to see you married and settled down. You are said to be in love with Mary Blackstone."
"A light seemed to glitter in Fitch's eyes."
"I'm afraid her father doesn't like me, uncle," he said, "and there is someone whom I think she likes more."
"Tommy?"
Fitch nodded, and Barclay smiled grimly.
"I will take care of Blackstone and Tommy," he said, "you take care of the girl."
Then he sent for Tommy.
"Tommy," he said, "I'm very fond of you and you have been a bitter disappointment to me."
"I know it," said Tommy. "I can't help it. I'm made that way, but I'm awfully sorry."
"The bulk of my property," said Barclay, "will have to go to some one with more respect for property."
"Yes, sir, I see that."
"But you will always have plenty."
"Thank you, sir."
"That's because I'm fond of you, and because it is only just."
"Even if you are disappointed in me," said Tommy, "please don't stop liking me."
"I shall always be fond of you, Tommy," he said.
Ten minutes later the great man wrote a few direct dictatorial sentences on a sheet of note paper, and sent them by a special messenger to Mary Blackstone's father.

Senator Blackstone, a man with a large mouth, hooked-nose and white side whiskers, frowned heavily after reading Barclay's note; frowned heavily, heavily paced the floor of his library, gave vent to defiant mutterings, and then suddenly collapsed into a deep chair, as, if very tired, and read the note again:
Dear Blackstone:—
Don't by any chance allow your daughter to throw herself away on my adopted son. She belongs to the aristocracy of wealth. That aristocracy may one day become a nobility. Mary is fitted to wear the purple and to share the throne of the world's greatest empire. The world in which we live is pregnant with great events. And the weak will go under. Destroy this.
Yours in haste,
BARCLAY.

RUSSIANS HALT GERMAN ADVANCE
BERLIN (via Wireless to London), Sept. 6.—No important progress has been made toward Riga or Vilna during the last two days, the war office admitted today.
Reporting operations on the Eastern front, an official statement said the situation on the front from the Baltic to east of Grodno was unchanged.

EXPENSIVE REPAIRS NEEDED ON "SUBS"
HONOLULU, Sept. 6.—Investigation into the damages sustained by the F-1, F-2 and F-3, the three remaining submarines of the "F" type, which were rammed by the U. S. S. Supply, show that expensive repairs will have to be made on all of them. The F-3 will have to be drydocked, and the F-1 is leaking in the after fuel tank.

CONCERT FOR THEO
A farewell concert to Theo Karl Johnston, Seattle's young tenor, who is going to New York city to continue his musical studies, will be given September 27, the proceeds to go toward paying his Eastern expenses. It is being arranged by the young singer's friends.
