THE GODDESS INTRODUCING EARLE WILLIAMS as . . Tommy Barclay ANITA STEWART as . . . The Goddess Written by GOUVERNEUR MORRIS One of the Most Notable Figures in American Literature Read the Story Here; See It on Screen at the Alhambra

The three richest men in America, fearing popular reprobation and wishing to find an aristocracy of wealth, employ Professor Stilliter, a famous psychologist, to kidnap a beautiful girl, the product of an eugenic marriage. The child grows to womanhood in a cavern in the Adirondacks, where she is told by "angels" that the cavern "heaven," and that it is her destiny to return to earth and reform the world, teaching the people obedience and contentment. As she is leaving the wilderness to begin her work, she is rescued from Stilliter by Tommy Barclay, adopted son of the chief of the money triumvirate, who in his turn loses her to a woman. Her advent in New York creates a profound sensation. The poor believe her to be of divine origin. After various adventures—among them being sold by a procuress to a white-slaver for $1,000—she finds shelter in the tenement home of the Douglases, in the slums. She preaches her doctrine to rich and poor alike. In yesterday's installment she goes to the plant of the Detroit shoe company—a fire trap—to talk to the girls there. Tommy Barclay follows her. Tommy saves Celestia's life. He tells his father by adoption he wants to marry The Goddess.

CHAPTER XVI. (Copyright, 1915, by The Star Co.) Meanwhile no less important a person than Mary Blackstone had looked for Celestia and found her. Descending from a twelve-thousand-dollar car of foreign make, she had rung the front door bell of the Douglas house and had been admitted by Freddie the Ferret, whose chief pleasure in life it had become to be ever as near Celestia as possible, to do chores for her and to run errands. "You want to see HER?" asked Freddie. "Celestia? Yes." "Step right in." He ushered her into a front room where Celestia was busy at a table covered with papers. "High-flyer to see you," announced Freddie, and withdrew. Celestia rose and came shyly forward. She did not know her visitor by name. She had never seen her before. But something told her that the slim, beautiful, dark girl in the tailor-made suit was not altogether a stranger. Mary was careful to choose a chair which stood with its back to the light. "I came," she said, "upon a most delicate errand."

"Yes." "We have a mutual friend—" "Mr. Barclay." "How did you guess?" "None of my other friends would be at all likely to be a friend of yours, too. All my friends in this world, so far, are either poor people or laborers." "All but Mr. Barclay?" Celestia nodded. "I've come to speak to you about him. He has, as you know, a great future before him. His friends very naturally—please don't misunderstand me—it's nothing against you—but we've all heard of the melodramatic Octagon fire rescue, and we all know how susceptible he is to romance and beauty—and you are beautiful. Do you mind if I say that? You are perfectly beautiful—"

"But I belong to a different station in life than this mutual friend of ours. I'm so susceptible to romance and beauty, and you have come to beg off for him with arguments about blasted prospects and ruined careers and social ostracism?" Though Celestia spoke with great gentleness Miss Blackstone was for a moment greatly taken aback. But recovering she laughed good-naturedly and said: "You are not only beautiful but clever." "Why couldn't I make him a good wife?" "You are too sensible to ask questions like that. You couldn't expect his friends to—" "Receive me? Perhaps not. And yet I speak a number of languages; I have your word for it that I have good looks. At table my chief weapon is fork. I am young and healthy, and I haven't been long enough in this world to have a past. "If I am to let him off you must give me a better line of reasoning than maybes and perhapses. What if my whole happiness was bound up in him; his in me? If I told you that we were already married—" "Good God!" exclaimed Mary. "Don't worry," said Celestia, "we are not. But I am certainly not going to give him up on the grounds that I am not his social equal." "If he does marry you," said Miss Blackstone, suddenly losing control of her temper at the look on Celestia's face, "people will say it was because he had to. They can't camp in the North Woods without a chaperon and escape malicious talk." "It would seem so," said Celestia slowly. And she started to turn very pink and ended by turning white. And there began to burn suddenly in her breast a feeling of which until that moment she had known nothing. Sweetest she was, gracious and good. She thought she had been sent by heaven to help everybody in the world. Nevertheless those sharp burning pangs which she was enduring were jealousy.

"You love him yourself," she said quickly, "and so I think I will marry him after all." "One can't argue except with an equal," said Miss Blackstone, and turned upon her heel. As she left the house, Tommy Barclay was on the point of entering it. She was so angry that she cut him dead. He expected to find Celestia as usual, friendly, cool, well poised and aloof. She was none of these things. Tears were just going to overflow her eyes and run down her face, and as for being aloof, she no sooner saw Tommy than she ran to him, as a child runs to its nurse, and flung out her arms about his neck, and told him that she loved him and would marry him. "Right away," she said.

Poor Tommy! He held her close and caressed her, and there was a big lump in his throat, and never a word that he could say until at last the meaning of his silence was clear to Celestia, and she tore herself loose from him. "Now it's your turn," she cried, "who won't marry me." "Oh, Celestia," cried Tommy, "how can I? I haven't a penny in the world!" A dozen of the most important men in the United States were gathered in Barclay's office upon his urgent invitation. The last to arrive was Kehr, the coal baron. Professor Stilliter had been telling of some recent experiments in hypnotism of which he had just received the account from an Arabian correspondent. As Kehr entered he caught the word "hypnotism" and snorted. After this he shook hands with Barclay and the others, last of all with Stilliter. "You don't believe in hypnotism," said Stilliter, "because you don't know anything about it." So saying he took from his case that famous crystal of which mention had been made. "I am not rich," said Stilliter, quietly, "but I will give you a thousand dollars if you can find a flaw or an imperfection of any sort in that crystal." He reached around Kehr from behind and quickly took the crystal away from him. Then he turned to his audience. "Did I hear someone say 'put up job'? I hope not. It wouldn't have been worth while. Why, he was easier to hypnotize than a chicken. Tell the gentlemen how easily you were hypnotized. Turn and face them first, make a little bow. That's a fine fellow. Now then!" Kehr spoke in a dull, monotonous voice. "Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "I was easier to hypnotize than a chicken." "Spoken like a man!" exclaimed Stilliter. He turned to Kehr and in a voice of command said: "Sit down at the desk in the first position of writing." Kehr obeyed. "Take a sheet of paper. Ink your pen. Prepare to write. Write as I dictate: Dear Professor, I. O. U. ten million dollars." Kehr finished and there was a craning of necks to see what he had written. The I. O. U. was passed from hand to hand. Suddenly Sturtevant broke the silence. "This," he said, "is only a scrap of paper. It hasn't cost him a cent."

DO NOT MARRY A TAILOR'S MODEL, PASTOR URGES PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 20.—Unmarried women members of the congregation of the White Temple are today pondering the advice given them by their pastor, the Rev. Dr. Hinson, yesterday, when he preached upon "The Man You Ought to Marry." "The man you marry should not be a tailor's model," Dr. Hinson said, "wearing a sport collar four inches wide, a tie loud enough to rival a circus band, an oasis of green socks between trouser and shoe, and a chin fit only to hold up cigars."

FILIKUMS BUSY Advertising good roads, the flying squadron of the Filikums has begun making the rounds of county fairs of the state. George A. Leo is chairman, and more than a score of others comprise the committee. They are making the rounds in motor cars.
