FIGHT IN DEPARTMENT STORE; TOY SOLDIERS TAKE UP ARMS

—than the Boy Scout movement." "A very good movement," said the night watchman. "I was very angry. You see, personally, I'm for unpreparedness. I hate war. We wrangled furiously and enjoyed ourselves thoroughly until, by and by, we got so mad we would not speak at all. We just smoked. After a time the night watchman left his little cubbyhole of an office to make his rounds. He was going quite a long time. Becoming drowsy and finding the air of the room uncomfortably warm and close, I strolled thru the store myself. The night watchman says I didn't, but I know I did.

My, a big store is an eerie place at night when all the clerks and customers have left it! I kept on and on, thinking I might meet the night watchman, but I didn't. I couldn't see what was on the counters and shelves, for they were covered with white cloths. But I ran, slap! into a very young, beautifully gowned and charming lady, and was in the middle of apologizing for my unintentional rudeness when I discovered she was a wax figure.

MEETS GENERAL KITCHENER
I climbed some stairs—for, of course, the elevators weren't running—and the sound of my feet on the steps seemed thunderously loud. Then I came to the toy department. And found myself face to face with Gen. Kitchener!

PAY AN AWFUL PRICE
I am not sure whether the allies took the fort or not. If they did, they paid an awful price. I turned away, sickened. Little Red Cross dolls were coming up with ambulances and stretchers. My son wants one of those ambulances.

I came to an artificial pond. It is a popular spot for small children, day-times. I wanted to get away from war, but here I encountered it in another form.

The German fleet was making a sortie, scouting out from behind the impregnable fortifications of Helgoland. The British were ready for them. My boy wants one of those battleships, but they're pretty expensive.

If he can't have a battleship, or a cruiser, he thinks he ought at least to have a submarine. SUBMARINE IS SUNK

Very clever—those submarines. You shoot at them as they float on the surface of the water, and if you hit a certain dingy in the exact middle, they collapse and sink. And you win!
Well, a shot hit one of the submarines in the dingy, and it sank. And the poor, brave, foolish fellows in the submarine didn't have a chance.
I didn't mind that so much, but when a nice, luxurious ocean liner, filled with passengers, came along, and a submarine torpedoed it, and everybody was drowned like rats, I got good and mad.
It was cruel and cowardly, and confirmed all my opinions concerning war.

I ran back in the direction whence I had come, and presently I saw Gen. Kitchener riding a prancing horse on wheels.

TRIES TO STOP BATTLE
"Here, you!" I said, grabbing him, "this war must stop!"
"I say," he shouted, to his aide de camp, "this chap is bothering me again. He isn't a journalist. He's one of those hally peace chaps. Take him away. Joffre and I agreed we wouldn't have anything to do with Henry Ford or any of those other blighters on the Oscar Prince. Take him away!"
Then he put spurs to his horse, and galloped away so fast I couldn't catch him.

So I went back to the night watchman's cubbyhole.
"Say, you!" I shouted. "You're in authority here. You make those dolls quit killing each other."
But the night watchman just laughed. And when I told him about the war in the toy department, he laughed some more, in that nasty way of his, and said he had found me asleep in my chair and that I had dreamed it.
But I knew better.
