GERMANS PREPARE TO ENGAGE BRITISH FLEET

LONDON, Feb. 8.—A mighty battle is imminent in the North Sea, is believed here today.

Dutch rumors that the Germans are preparing for their long-expected dash constitute the basis for such belief. There are seemingly corroborative reports from other sources.

Hague reports are that the Germans along the Belgian coast had withdrawn and taken refuge in the Kiel canal, where Germany's war dogs have been held in leash for most of the war. Leaves of absence for all officers are reported to have been cancelled.

Copenhagen reports say there is extreme activity at Kiel, and that the German ships are about to venture forth and risk an engagement. Four Zeppelins and a flock of Taubes have reinforced the air flotilla at Kiel. It is assumed these will accompany the warships should they make their rally.

Vague rumors that the Germans planned to attempt a startling coup reached London before the English liner Appam was barged by a German commerce raider.

Since then almost every Berlin dispatch has contained similar rumors. Germany, according to the stories here, has laid well her plans for the long delayed venture on the seas. Her dreadnaughts have been equipped with 17-inch guns, and her Zeppelins have been fixed so they can shoot torpedoes from the air.

MITCHELL CAN'T SERVE; SEEK NEW MAN ON COMMITTEE

A. Chebbre Mitchell, manager of the Butler hotel, will be unable to serve as a member of a committee of three appointed last week to represent Seattle citizens in their fight for equal tourist rates. "Other business matters pressing upon me at this time," he said, "prevent my taking a part in the rate fight as a committeeman. As much as I regret to give it up, I find that I cannot undertake the work at present. I shall, however, be on the job individually until the fight is won."

As a consequence, T. D. Rockwell, chairman of the citizens' body, is casting about Tuesday for a successor to fill Mitchell's place on the committee.

By the first of May, it is expected, the commission will send a special examiner here to take testimony relative to the injury the existing preferential now operating in favor of those railroads, the climax of the fight is now rapidly near.

Every line of industry in the Northwest will be represented in some way in the lineup against the railroads at the hearing.

Confessions of a Wife

A LETTER FROM MOLLIE
I am having a deluge of correspondence. Had a letter from Mollie this morning. She and Chad are in Florence, or "heaven," she puts it.
"Oh, Margie," she writes, "I wish every one in all this world was as happy as I am."
"The loveliest thing about Chad is that he loves the same things I do."
"This morning I remarked that I wanted to go to all the places mentioned in George Elliot's "Romola," and that, as I supposed the pilgrimage would bore him to death, he might be excused for the day."
"He looked at me rather queerly for a moment and said: 'Mollie, how did you come to Florence for that very purpose? I am old-fashioned enough to think that George Elliot is one of the sweetest books I ever read, and I have wanted all my life to visit the places that George Elliot has pictured as having known her heroine.'
"Margie, I am so happy that I am afraid, I am sure that the fates will be jealous. And here is the queer part of it, Margie, I know that Chad's first wife has hoped to make me happy. You see, she was so full of fish and self-centered that she never did anything he wanted to do if she could help it. She did not like books—nor out of doors, nor anything, as far as I can learn from little things that Chad intimates unknowingly, except to deck her person and attract attention to herself."
"Chad is so appreciative of everything and he is so considerate of me and my little foibles. Dick seemed to think I would get tired of having him always around. He said: 'A woman is a fool to marry a man who has no interest in life but herself.'
"Up to date, I find being my husband's only interest the most wonderful thing that has ever happened to me."
"We evidently have not talked out yet, for Chad always finds something to say to me, and I always have a new idea that I have not yet told him."
"Last night I talked to him about you, Margie, and what you had done for me, how you had helped me."

"When Dick married Margie, I said: 'I was just drifting about. I had no ambitions, no particular standards. I was ready to flirt with almost any good looking chap to whom I was introduced. Having a good time was my only business in life.'
"I thought Margie an awful prude at first, and then I came to see that she was not prudish at all."
"Her standards were those of self-respect and respect for the rights of others."
"I think she is the one woman in all the world who sees other fellows' points of view."
"She never looks at the world in relation to herself, but always views herself in relation to the world."
"She has never said in all her life: 'If I could not do that or I could only do this,' neither did she say to me, 'You must do that only this way.'
"What she said to me was of the most encouraging nature, for it was selfless. 'Think it out for yourself, think that everything must be paid for in this world. Count the cost to yourself and to those you love, and then if you determine that what you want to do is the thing to do, go ahead and do it, and, above all, don't let it come out differently than you expected.'
"I told him, Margie, you were too good for Dick, and he said, 'any good woman was too good for any man.'
"Above all the things I like in Chad is his tolerance. He never acts as though his brain was the least little bit finer or bigger than mine, and he will thresh out a subject with me as he would do with a man."
"I am so happy that I am apt to get maudling."
"Have not had a word from mother since we left."
"Is she completely broken-hearted?"
"Write and tell me all about yourself. I am sorry for you, Margie, dear, for I know that you were never as happy as at the present moment is your."
"Loving
