

Would You Like a Beautiful, Expressive Mouth?

THE teeth are not only the most important members in the entire body, because they guard the stomach, take care of mastication and start good digestion, upon which sound health and good spirits so much depend.

BUT the mouth is a most important organ—important in business and social affairs and so in the general welfare of mankind.

WHEN you speak to a man you look at his eyes, but he looks at your mouth. Dignity and authority are scarcely possible with decayed, missing or badly fitting artificial teeth. Good teeth, then, which shape the mouth, give clear enunciation to your words, and a firm, pleasing expression to your face, are mighty important factors to your business as well as to your health.

OUR Nature Teeth, made to fit your jaws—built in—so that they are as firm and white and natural as Nature's own—cost no more than ordinary dentistry. Yet Nature Teeth are vastly different—greatly superior.

THE very highest grade material goes into them—the very highest skill—the greatest care and attention. They are made to wear a lifetime and will be replaced free if they fall of perfection in 12 years.

OUR laboratories are the most complete in the West, and all work is done here—under our own eyes. We guarantee the fit—the appearance—the wear—the quality for 12 years. We also guarantee all work painless by our own oraltheia.

Let us explain the difference between these Nature Teeth of ours and other dentistry. Allow us to examine your mouth and advise you free.

CINDERELLA CHARMS Her Type Often Used in the Movies

Mignon Anderson With Al Jennings in "Beating Back," at Rex

Alhambra—Vandeville and pictures. Class A—Drama, "The Surprise of an Empty Hotel", comedy, "A Cripple Creek Cinderella". Clemmer—Chas. Kent and Antonio Marcus in "Kennedy Square." Coliseum—Harold Lockwood in "Life's Blind Alley." Colonial—Burr McIntosh in "My Partner." Hippodrome—Vandeville and pictures. Liberty—Max March in "Hoodoo Ann"; Fred Mac in "The Village Vampire." Mission—Robert Howarth in "Two Men of Sandy Bar." Rex—Al Jennings in "Beating Back." Strand—Jane Grey in "Man and His Angel."

That the Cinderella story is perennially popular is attested by the successes of many variations, from "Sis Hopkins" to "Pygmalion," and includes "Teg O' My Heart" and "Hoodoo Ann." The last named is the Triangle release which will be shown for the last time Tuesday at the Liberty. The particular Cinderella in "Hoodoo Ann" is a child in an orphanage at Meadowdale, whose love of innocent mischief has brought her into disfavor with one Prudence Scraggs, the crabbed old matron, and into a life which seems to be nothing but scrubbing floors and washing dishes. But like the true optimist that she is, Ann makes the best of her misfortune and retains her sunny disposition, winning happiness in the end.

BRET HARTE STORY SHOWN WEDNESDAY
The show that the Mission theatre advertised for the fore part of this week, "Two Men of Sandy Bar," Bret Harte's greatest and biggest success, featuring Hobart Bosworth, did not arrive, and so it is now securely locked up in their safe and will be presented for the last four days, starting Wednesday. The show that this theatre substituted is equally as good in every respect. "The Crimson Trail," together with "The Iron Rivals" constitute the present program. A news pictorial concludes the bill.

DAD NOW HAS CHANCE OF A LONG LIFETIME
Those Paramount Pictorials, at the Coliseum theatre, ought to find a warm spot in daddy's heart. Many a pleasant dinner has been spoiled by lack of a good carver. Now come the movies to teach father how to carve. This week it's a roast of beef. Next week, an expert will show dad how to cut up a duck. Yum, yum.

SOCIETY'S LAW UPHELD IN "BEATING BACK"
That the law of society must govern against individual objections—is the lesson portrayed in the life of Al Jennings, whose interesting career—in some ways more absorbing than a story in fiction—is now presented at the Rex theatre. The story is entitled "Beating Back," the same title used in the Saturday Evening Post when it ran in serial form. Jennings' life story was written by himself in collaboration with Will Irwin. It depicts a career which started with law, turned to outlaw life, train robbing, federal penitentiary.

STRONG PLAY AT STRAND
Jane Grey and Henri Bergman are featured at the Strand theatre in "Man and His Angel," a story of a woman's sacrifice and the ingratitude of man. Both Miss Grey and Bergman are exceptionally well cast, and the story of the play is of strong interest from start to finish.

H. B. Warner, the noted English actor, is starred in "The Raiders," the next Triangle feature to be seen in Seattle.

GENUINE SURPRISE
"The Surprise of an Empty Hotel" is the feature attraction for the last time Tuesday night at the Class A theatre. It's some surprise, too.

41 YEARS ON STAGE
Charles Kent, who is seen in an unusually sympathetic role in "Kennedy Square," at the Coliseum theatre, has been in the theatrical profession since 1875.

The horses originated in America, but fossil remains of the animal have been found in India, Africa, South America, Kansas and California.

CONFESSIONS OF A WIFE

I HAVE STARTED QUITE A DISCUSSION
"Certainly not," said Dick, Jim, Pat and Harry in unison when I asked if a woman should marry a man younger than herself last night.

"Who is going to marry a man younger than herself?" asked Bill Tenney.
"Mary," I said.
"For the love of Mike," said Dick. "Who is she going to marry?"
"Max Pendleton."
"That boy"—this was from Jim Edie.
"Have you anything against him but his youth?" I asked.
"Nothing," answered Dick. "Mary is at least eight years older than he."
"She is nine years older," I volunteered. "Mary is 33, she writes me, and Max 24."
"Is he the chap who was always hanging about the book shop?" asked Harry.
"I presume so—he is very studious and well off."
"Well," said Jim, "I should look a little older before I married a woman older than I."
"Why, Jim?" I asked. "Look over the young women you know and tell me how many of them interest you."
"Well, you and Donna and Ellene interest me," affirmed Jim, and I joined in the laugh against myself.
"I grant you that, but what is your objection to a woman older than you?"
"Women grow old faster than men, and a man does not want to see wrinkles in front of him at the breakfast."
"I don't agree with you, Jim," I spoke Ellene. "That is one of the ideas that went out with our grandmothers.

"Today men grow old faster than women. Look at us—not one of us looks her age—I mean the way our mothers looked at our age—within five years, and Margie, over there with all her sickness and sorrow, does not look within 10 years of the age she confesses. On the other hand, Bill here looks 10 years older than really is and 20 years older than Donna, who is only five years younger than he. I am sure Harry looks older than I, altho we are the same age—I am five days older than he, to be exact."
"Jim is right about one thing," said Donna. "A man wants to look into the face of youth."
"And he wants youth to look into his face as he was looking into a mirror," confessed Bill.
"You see, Margie, a man hates to get old just as badly as a woman, but each goes to work to keep youth in a different fashion. You women resort to all the feminine tricks of massage and cosmetics. We look into your bright eyes instead of the mirror and cheat ourselves into believing we are as young as you look."
"Splendid," Bill, exclaimed Ellene, "you probably will compliment your pretty nurse on your hair, but what does not settle the question, should a woman marry a man younger than she? I, for my part, think she should if she is 35 or over. After a man is 40 he begins to settle down and grow selfish; at least, that is what I have found. Unless he has some woman to watch him, he grows careless about his person."
Jim and Pat began to fix their ties.

"I don't think age has anything to do with it," I said.
"No," interrupted the irrepressible Jim, "it's a gamble anyway. If you put your money on the red, you wish you had staked it on the blue."
"But you haven't put your money on any color," said Donna. "I'm waiting for you, dear lady," said Jim, with a bow.
"Then you will marry a woman older than you?" confessed Donna laughing.
"It was good, little book, to once more hear the light talk of the old crowd. For a little while I forgot I was bedridden and in pain. None of us could decide whether it was best for a woman to marry a man younger than herself."
