Green Lake and Ballard to Hear Sen. Poindexter

Following a visit Tuesday afternoon at Port Townsend, United States Senator Miles Poindexter will speak at the Greenlake library Tuesday night and also at Junction hall, Ballard.

Senator Poindexter made three speeches Monday, besides visiting in Ballard, Renton, and at the letter carriers' celebration in Seattle.

HERMAN NELSEN WINS AUDIENCE

Herman Nelsen, candidate for county commissioner in the South district, struck a responsive chord in an audience Monday night at the Tanner schoolhouse, near Kent, when he declared that he is making no promises except to eliminate road supervisors and use their salaries for actual work on the roads.

Nelsen's remark was significant because of reported promises by other candidates for the draining of a private lake and other private deals at county expense.

"I am in this race," said Nelsen, "who is a well-known farmer and had never run for a salaried office before, free and independent. No one has any strings on me. I am free to serve the public in the best way possible."

PRaises: HUGHES
The Chicago convention "a 100 per cent American" in Charles E. Hughes, according to Adam Beeler, attorney, who addressed the Women's King County Hughes club Monday.

AT BALLARD
John E. Ballaine and J. Y. C. Kellogg, candidates for congress, will speak at Junction hall, Ballard, Tuesday night.

CORONER'S OFFICE
Dr. C. C. Tiffin, candidate for coroner, addressed a meeting at the Tanner school, near Kent, Monday night. He outlined his policy in the administration of the office on an impartial and fair basis.

MRS. BURLEIGH TO SPEAK
Mrs. W. A. Burleigh will speak at Green Lake library Tuesday night in behalf of Col. Hartley for governor.

GREEN IS HEARD
Capt. Frank E. Green, candidate for prosecutor, addressed the Druids Monday night and Tuesday afternoon spoke to the Women's Hughes-Roosevelt league.

STAR MAN'S ALL TUCKERED OUT KEEPING UP POINDEXTER PAGE

And it was not without its amusing features to see them both contend for the privilege of introducing him to as many residents of Renton as possible during his day of whirlwind campaign.

Knew She'd Like Him
But to return to Margaret. "I couldn't tell by your picture," she explained, "but somehow something told me you were a good, strong man."

A tall, straight figure is Poindexter's. Broad-shouldered, robust, a ruddy color to his face, he is a picture of good health.

I can well see Coach Doble looking longingly at the tall senator and hungrily wishing he could have had him for football material a few years back. For the man who can weather the campaigning Senator Poindexter waged Monday should have been able to do yeoman's work on the gridiron.

Needs Strong Body
To meet people, one after the other, to recognize them, to maintain an even poise, a cheerful attitude, for 12 to 15 hours a day, needs a steady eye, a well trained constitution, and above all, an unfettered mind and a dutiful heart.

At 1 p. m. Monday 300 business men and professional men arose at the Commercial Club to forget their usual conservative poise, and gave three lusty cheers for Poindexter. I noticed in that crowd bankers, merchants, lawyers, doctors, engineers, real estate men.

Ten hours later he got the same greeting in front of the Willard hotel.

Three thundering cheers resounded above the music of the band that played across the street in Dreamland rink.

This time a crowd of letter carriers did the cheering.

A far jump, you say, from banker to letter carrier? Yes, in the ordinary view of the social scale.

But Senator Poindexter surmounts the ordinary. He is a public official who makes the astounding effort to get rid of politics.

And when you get down to it, the banker and manufacturer are as eager to take the tariff out of politics as the mail carrier is to take promotions in the department out of politics.

Business Men Cut Loose
So, at the Commercial Club, the business men cheered Poindexter, waved handkerchiefs and whooped it up like college students, because they knew that Senator Poindexter had offered an amendment and secured 13 votes to have a tariff commission adjust protective tariff rates in the same scientific manner that railroad commissions control transportation.

And the mail carriers knew that Senator Poindexter has consistently championed the idea that the men in the department, who are able and efficient, should be promoted to the higher places, instead of making political appointments under a "spoils" system.

Average Folk Greet Him
It was the same way with the average folks—at Ballard, at Renton, at Kent, at Auburn.

They cheered most his declaration against a narrow, partisan view, and his promise to act in the future, as in the past, on the merits of bills, regardless of the politics involved. At Kent, altho the senator was not scheduled to speak, a crowd gathered on the main street and waited half an hour until he appeared, insisting that he speak. He did—from an auto.

Who was in the audience? There were about 100 there. There was the justice of the peace, costless, with his vest flung wide open, and there was Banker Odee, and Realty Dealer Mayhew, a number of women, and some workers from nearby shops. They all were eager to tell the senator that Kent is with him strong.

At Renton a real estate man named Marlowe greeted Poindexter as tho he were a long-lost brother.

Knows He Made Good
"I met you six years ago, and I still have your card."

He dug it out of a drawer and read it. It contained the pledges made by Poindexter six years ago. "I've watched them," said Marlowe, "and, by George, you've kept every promise."

At Auburn, the seat of the county ring, Senator Poindexter had an audience of more than 200 at the Dream theatre. He was introduced by Attorney Brewer. He had been the guest at dinner of Dr. Merrill. The railway workers had a committee to tell the senator they were for him.

10 P. M., Still Going
It was after 10 p. m. when the Auburn meeting ended. Former Mayor Dilling of Seattle and Geo. H. Walker, chairman of the Poindexter campaign committee, had taken the trip with the senator into the South district.

"It's been a long day," said Dilling.

"But it's not over yet," said Walker. "The letter carriers are anxious to see the senator."

I left while the cheering was going on. I was afraid the senator might have two or three more engagements before the night was over.

JITNEY REGULATION GOES TO TRIO OF COUNCILMEN FOR SOLUTION

Council chambers were packed once more by opponents of drastic jitney regulation Monday afternoon, and once more council put the matter over.

This latest move resulted from a motion by Councilman Thomson that a committee of three councilmen investigate and report on the matter of jitney bus transportation, and the need of regulation.

President Haas appointed Moore, Hanna and Hesketh on the committee.

Manager Kempster of the street car company submitted a box full of signed slips favoring regulation, which had been gathered by conductors, motormen, and men, women and children solicitors. There were 41,751 slips, according to the signed statement of his chief clerk.

Many Repudiate Signatures
A number of letters were read from parents, who explained that their children had been persuaded to sign the petitions, not knowing what they were doing. Many of them were from 6 to 9 years of age, parents said.

One communication from Frank Gates stated that he had been permitted to sign 25 slips, with the understanding that he turn them in to different conductors.

"I gave five signatures each to five conductors," he stated, "and each conductor knew they were duplicates."

Clubs Didn't Approve It
A communication urging regulation, accompanied by a "model" ordinance, was submitted to the council, signed by A. V. Bouillon, Edgar J. Wright and J. A. Paine, said to have been representing the combined improvement and civic clubs of the city.

Just after Councilman Thomson had suggested that the council hear from both sides of the lobby on the proposed ordinance, Charles Udell informed the council that the improvement clubs, at their meeting, August 18, had voted down the proposition of approving the proposed ordinance, because it was too drastic.

With this light on the document confirmed by cross-questioning R. W. Douglas, who had been chairman of the meeting, the council decided not to formally consider the Bouillon communication and ordinance, and the plan of having three councilmen do the investigating and reporting was adopted.
