Harold Weeks Is Another Seattle Writer of Songs Who Made Good

Harold Weeks

When a fellow puts in years of hard work trying to achieve something, and then lands at the end only to see some other fellow getting a lot of laurels that he figures he should share himself, naturally he feels somewhat "miffed."

So 'tis with Harold Weeks, popular song writer, of Seattle. A fortnight ago he read a story in The Star about James Casey, writer of "Sing Me a Song of the Sunny South" and other popular melodies.

The Star said that Casey was "a regular, died-in-the-wool, 18-karat composer, right here in Seattle. And he is."

Weeks Praises Casey
Even Weeks praises him in the letter he wrote The Star today. "His ability as a song writer is unassailable," says Weeks.

But Weeks, too, has a record of being something of a composer. "I claim to be the only real Seattle composer, and am sending you the proofs," he says.

And inclosed with the letter Weeks wrote were five of his songs. He composed the music of two of them and wrote the song-poem of the other three.

"It Beats 'Em All"
His last composition is "What's a Fellow Goin' to Do?" "It beats them all," he says. "Try it."

His others are: "Ione by the River Rhone," "My Candy Girl in Old Ceylon," "My Honolulu Bride," and "No Fair Falling in Love."

"Casey's hit songs," writes Weeks, "Sunny South" and "My Big Moon," were written long before he ever sniffed the salt air of Puget sound. "Sunny South" was written in Virginia, "My Big Moon" while he was living on his ranch in California."

So, it looks as if we'd have to hand some laurel sprig to Weeks. And glad we are to do it.

THE QUESTIONS OF WIFE

EMMA VIEWS MARRIAGE AS A JOB; ADVISES PAULA TO ACCEPT JEFF'S PROPOSAL

"And so I thought," continued Paula, "Jefferson Perrigreen is just like all the rest."

"All men want to be possessed by women as they do anything else they desire," I said to Emma, who was reading Jeff's letter.

"Say, kid," she said at last, "I certainly believe this guy of yours is straight. If you wrote him a letter telling him he has not offered you marriage so good to me, and I have thought you ought to be honest, as a girl should, he'd be the most surprised gink in the world."

"But, Emma, I can't do that," I said. "Why not?" demanded Emma. "I have scorned Jeff Perrigreen all my life."

"Do you love him, Paula?" "There's the rub, Emma. I am sure I have had none of those thrills and emotions best sellers describe. I have grown fond of Jeff since my parents died because he has refused to marry me, as I have refused to marry Charlie Montgomery."

"Well, you can do as you think best. You will, anyway, for no one ever takes advice unless it coincides with one's own ideas on the subject. But if it was me, I'd call that chap. It would be a show down for that guy, and, if he showed the axes of matrimony, I'd take him quick."

But, Emma, I really don't want him. I think I'd be doing him a great injustice if I married him without loving him."

"See here, Paula, you will have to get over the idea that marriage is a continuation of love's young dream. Marriage is a job. Do you want to tackle it, or do you prefer some other job first? Honestly, my dear, I think you'd best suited to be the wife of a rich man."

"Perhaps, Emma, but I want to be sure I can fill the job before I take it. I could not leave it to the restaurant if I did not like it."

"There is always Reno for the rich married woman," said Emma tersely. "Altho I had grown to care a great deal for Emma, Margie, I must confess at times her common sense hurt me."

"You see, my dear Paula," she once told me, "I have learned everything I know from experience, and if I seem hard it is because I have had all my education knocked into me. I certainly do not think all people are bad, but neither do I think any one of us, man or woman, is perfect. Human nature is still in the making, you know."
