WASTE FIGHTERS OFFERING MANY SAVING HINTS

Not the least interesting result of the State's work for the Women's Army Against Waste has been the suggestions from readers as to other kinds of waste than food waste which might be eliminated.

It is impossible to print all these suggestions; but some idea of their range may be given by the following:
From W. M. Goodwin, 5274 45th S. W.: "It is the custom of the railroads, when a trestle or bridge needs repairing, to take the large timbers and burn them. Why could they not make some arrangement whereby these timbers could be sold or given to the needy of our city? I pass every day when the Northern Pacific is burning carload after carload of timbers 6x12 and as long as the car."
From "A Locomotive Fireman": "Thousands of dollars' worth of old bridge timbers, street planking, railroad ties and pieces of lumber left in cars after being unloaded are thrown away or burned; but the railroads will not let the people have any of them. I know from experience. I am a locomotive fireman, and have tried to take some of the above, but have been stopped."

From Mrs. H. A. N.: "I think one item of waste could be cut down if we had a tax on cats as well as on dogs. Cats catch birds and eat the chickens, and are nuisances generally. One chicken is worth a dozen cats, from a food point of view. The milk the cats eat should be saved for the babies who need it, and anybody who needs a cat to catch mice should be willing to pay a cat tax on it."

From "A Reader": "While we hear so much about the ways women can practice economy, we hear nothing about how much money the men throw away by the use of tobacco. We know it would do no good to ask any of them (even some church members) to give up the weed altogether, but could you not cut out a few smokes or chews each day?"

From Mrs. Reynolds: "I have brought home fruit and vegetables, and have found them many times small, inferior or partly rotten. Last winter I bought a box of apples, and there were two dozen in the box I could not use. If this deception and fraud could be corrected, I am sure one feature of waste would be eliminated."

From "Economical, But Not Stingy": "Throwing away tin cans has always seemed a great waste to me. If the tin and iron are worth going into the bowels of the earth after, they surely are worth saving. Why couldn't the city require people to put cans and bottles in separate cans? The extra cost of garbage cans would easily be offset by the saving in taxes."

From "A Woman": "Make every woman have two garbage cans, one for ashes and dirt, and another for food that is not wanted. Fine every woman that does not follow this rule."

MAN STRANDED ON OWN HOUSE

O'NEILL, Neb., June 8.—J. Fritz Beutelmann met with a serious and peculiar accident the other day that is liable to keep him in bed.

As the weather was mild, he decided to make some badly needed repairs on the roof of his home. He spiked two 15-foot ladders together, gathered his tools and material and climbed to the roof, a distance of 28 feet.

For an hour Beutelmann worked away on the roof. Then a crash below caused him to peer over the edge. Consternation gripped his soul. One of his Herford steers had been scratching his hide on the ladder and overturned it. Beutelmann finished work on the roof and nudged his brain for a scheme that would get him safely back to earth. A neighbor whizzed by in a motor car. Beutelmann waved his arms desperately. The man in the car waved back—and kept on going. Again and again Beutelmann waved at passing vehicles. Again and again the occupants waved back. All thought the man on the roof was waving "hello" at them.

When darkness came it grew cold. The man on the roof was in danger of freezing, so he took his only chance—he jumped to the ground and broke a leg. Luckily for him, he had a telephone. Help came and the injured man is getting along well.

"War Bride" of 14 to Be Investigated; Husband Is But 19

CHICAGO, June 8.—A war bride of 14, whose husband of 19 prefers the steel mills to the firing line, is being investigated by local school authorities. The bride formerly was Margaret Scoggins, and now is married to Joseph Murray, said to be 19, but who gave his age to the clerk at Geneva as 21 and that of the bride as 18. Mrs. Scoggins, the mother, informed the school authorities her daughter had been freed of school obligations.

Dairies Go Out of Business; Prices Up

MINNEAPOLIS, June 8.—Fifty-one dairies have gone out of business in Minneapolis in the last year. At this time a year ago there were 70 dairies being operated within the city limits. Only 19 are in business today.

Girls Will Cut Out Foibles at School

DES MOINES, June 8.—As a wartime economy step the 107 girls in North Des Moines high school graduating class have decided to dispense with elaborate gowns and other costly accessories of commencement.

The girls are on record as favoring the utmost economy and are determined to campaign against all unnecessary extravagance.

Kansas Worried by Girl Baby Famine
KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 8.—The grave and learned authorities of Lynn County, School District No. 43, four miles north of Emporia, have appealed for more girl babies. That is to say, the school authorities crave advice—scientific or any other kind—having to do with such a situation as that which now confronts the district where, for nine years, there have been no girl babies born.

ries of District 43 have supplied the birth records of the county with twenty-two entries within the nine years. But there are no feminine names on the list.

Frenzied by Dream, Woman Is Suicide
ST. LOUIS, June 8.—Thrown into a frenzy by a dream that officers had surrounded her home with the intention of placing her under arrest, Mrs. Katherine Bonhard, 72, took her own life by throwing herself into a cistern.

Confessions of a Wife

THE VANITY OF A VAMPIRE

"The next morning when I arrived at the office, Margie," said Paula, "I found Congressman Smith with a smile, holding a letter which he evidently had been reading. It was the first smile I had seen on his face in a long while, and consequently I grinned from ear to ear."

"You look very happy, Miss Newton," he said to me.

"I am smiling merely to keep you company," I answered.

"That brought him back to the letter," "Can you tell me just what I have done for this man, Miss Newton?" he asked.

"I read the letter, which came from an old soldier out West somewhere. I shall always include you in my prayers," it read. "You have kept me from being a tax on my home community in my old age. You have enabled me to look into the future without encountering the hungry eyes of starvation. You have made one old soldier happy for his few remaining days."

"You introduced this pension bill, Honorable—I called him Honorable sometimes, Margie—"

"When did I do it? I don't remember it."

"Well, it is not supposed that you would, Honorable," I answered, "as all you had to do with it was to place it in the basket. I myself—and I dropped him a little curtsey—framed the bill most carefully."

"Congressman Smith's worried and weary eyes lighted up. 'I think I must have the best little secretary in the house,' he said."

"But, my dear boss, that is one of my regular duties," I answered. Just then one of the other congressmen, a man I never liked, came in and gruffly said: "I want to see you, Smith."

"Well, you are looking at me, aren't you, Brown?" said the boss with a smile, but the smile, I noticed, had a tightening of the lips and a narrowing of the eyes.

"A woman, you know I can't talk before a woman," was the somewhat aggressive declaration of Congressman Brown.

"You will have to talk before this one," answered Mr. Smith.

"I'm not a woman, I'm a secretary. I interrupted in a low voice to the boss."

"Well, I don't approve of these women secretaries anyway," said Brown as he lighted a long black cigar and blew the smoke directly in my face.

"I went behind the screen and began to work at my typewriter. I had not become very proficient at it as yet, but I was doing better every day and was much encouraged."

"You can have anything you want in this world, I kept saying to myself, Margie, if you want it badly enough."

"I could not help smiling at Paula as she said this. 'Why are you smiling?' she asked.

"Because I have said that same thing so often," I answered.

"Well, haven't you found I am right?" she asked briskly.

"I don't know, dear Paula, I have often missed the best things in life—things I thought that I wanted badly enough, and I inveighed against fate because I did not get them."

"Look back on them now, Margie," said Paula, "and I am sure you will find that however much you thought you wanted them, you wanted something else more."

"Congressman Smith thought he wanted political honors, but the thing he wanted most was the love of that horrid little bit of selfishness he called wife. I soon found from the words that were passing between those two men that day that Congressman Smith had already bartered his honor that he might minister to the vanity of that little vampire."

"But you've got to vote against it, Smith—and you've got to speak against it. If that bill goes through it means that the entire District goes dry."

"I know it," said the boss, "and I think it a good thing."

"What about those whisky bonds I sold you the other day at thirty?"

"Take them back, Brown, I don't want them—I'll not vote against the measure."

"Then I'll ruin you," shouted Brown.

"You can't do that. I'm ruined now," said the boss with a sigh.
