You have subscribed, you say? And to the very limit of your means, present and prudently prospective? You, whether wage-earner or millionaire, man in the street or magnate in office or bank, have already done your full part, you say, for Uncle Sam and taken stock in him to the extent of your spare dollars in hand and spare dollars on the way? You have? You feel no misgivings on that score? Then, God bless you and give you more of this world's goods! You are an American—the unflinching, unafraid American—the kind of an American that did his full part so patriotically away back in 1776, when the nation had its birth and acquired a character handed down unspottedly to this giant nation now going to war on behalf of humanity, civilization and liberty, and the peace of a world worth living in.
