NEW SYMPHONY WELL RECEIVED
Play Popular Concert at Low Prices April 20

BY EDWARD FOSS

The Seattle Symphony orchestra opened the spring season with a well-received Tschaiakowsky concert program in Masonic temple auditorium Thursday night, with Leopold Godowsky, Lithuanian pianist, amazing the large audience with his brilliant execution and poetical interpretation of the best of Tschaiakowsky and Chopin.

The opening night would have been a complete success but for the fact that a large number of people were late. The first selection, the overture-fantasia "Romeo and Juliet," was not started until nearly 9 o'clock, and the close of the long program people were leaving the auditorium by the dozens, some being compelled to hurry for boats and trains.

Sparzur Welcomed.
John Sparzur and his orchestra were affectionately welcomed. Sparzur conducted the Fourth symphony magnificently, that strange alternation between strings and brasses attaining tremendous, tumultuous power and appeal in the last movement. This was the principal piece of the evening, although others received more applause, notably, the Tschaiakowsky concerto in B flat minor. In this concerto, Godowsky demonstrated the almost unapproachable artist he is, his technique perfect and his interpretive insight none the less. He played, with an ease that fascinated, the most difficult and involved passages, and lent color to their original meaning and significance.

In the second piano group, the Chopin Andante Spianato and Polonaise, almost radically opposed to the concerto, were equally well explained by the flying fingers of Godowsky. Although he attempted to avoid doing so, Godowsky was compelled to respond to insistent applause and encores.

Tschaiakowsky's "March Slave," by the orchestra, was the concluding selection.

It was one of the best nights' musical offerings Seattle has been privileged to attend.

The first of the four popular afternoon concerts of the spring series will be held in Masonic temple auditorium, April 20, at 3 p. m. Low admission prices will be charged, as compared with the evening concert. Selections include the Mendelssohn "Fingal's Cave" overture, the Grieg "Peer Gynt" suite, and Goldmark, Tschaiakowsky, Massenet and Saint-Saens compositions.

Hallett Played in City 25 Years Ago

Al H. Hallett, of the Hallett and Howe Co., playing a short stock engagement at the Palace Hip, and presenting their farewell playlet until Saturday, is also celebrating this week the quarter century anniversary of his first appearance in Seattle as a dramatic actor. For it was just 25 years ago, in 1894, that Hallett was a member of the Russell and Drew stock productions at the old Third Ave. theatre and a highly popular "heavy" man.

WANT CITY TO BUY CAR LINE
Rainier Valley People Ask Murphine's Help

Starting a drive for the city purchase of the Rainier valley traction lines, members of the Young Men's Business club of Rainier valley have sent copies of a resolution urging that the city buy the property to every member of the council.

This action follows a conference of a committee of the club with Superintendent of Public Utilities Murphine late Thursday. The business men urged Murphine to recommend the purchase of the lines. They quoted the traction chief as saying the city could not pay for the system in 10 years, and that he would recommend the purchase if the company would accept 30 instead of 20 year bonds.

The price set on the equipment cars and property of the company is $1,800,000. The action of the club has been brought about by the proposals of the Rainier Valley Traction company to charge a 6-cent fare and make other rate increases.

NEED MORE MANUAL TRAINING TEACHERS
There is a shortage of manual training teachers in this state, according to J. G. Fletcher, vocational teacher at the University of Washington. These positions pay from $1,000 to $2,000 per year, and a course will be offered at the summer session of the university to train more instructors.

SKAGIT DATA TO BE PRESENTED
U. S. Forester Says Government Wants Action

City officials believe they can prove to U. S. Forester George H. Cecil that work of gathering the proper data on the proposed Skagit river power development has not been neglected. To this end, they have invited the district forester to accompany them on an inspection trip to the site as soon as the snows melt and they can travel up the river valley.

The utilities committee of the council Thursday made arrangements to complete the data on the power plan, acting upon a warning from Forester Cecil that the government expects Seattle to act without further delay in the matter.

After he has seen the investigation and checking the city has done along the river, the city officials believe the forester will feel warranted to recommend to the bureau of agriculture to continue with the final permit to continue with the work.
