Benefit for Orthopedic Hospital

An affair full of human interest was given last night for the benefit of the Orthopedic Hospital at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Hall. Mrs. W. A. Peters introduced the speakers, picturing how science has spent most of its time of late on machines of death and the cold skill of the surgeon alone needed to be supplemented by the human touch to awaken the hearts and point the way to the shattered wrecks that were left by the dread aftermath of war. To the girls and women was left, after the surgeon had done his utmost, the task of encouraging those souls who should have a place made for them in society, and not be made to feel that they were a burden on the world.

Miss Inez Morrison played a solo on the pipe organ, which was attractively executed. The second number, "Garden Memories," the composition by Mrs. Trafford Hutton, which has won its way into the hearts of music-lovers, was sung with a great deal of sympathetic feeling by Mrs. Langdon C. Henry. As an encore, Mrs. Henry sang a delightful song, the words of which were written by Miss Adelaide Hebron and set to music by her mother, Mrs. George Hebron.

Unfortunately Miss Katherine Kittinger was unable to talk last evening because of illness in her family. Seattle is proud of the girls whom she sent over there, and these two young women who talked last night, Miss Collins and Miss Hebron, have returned home full of humanity and cheerfulness that it is good to hear from those whose wisdom has been cultivated by the concrete, which strengthens the will of the intellect.

Many of the incidents related last night, if not laughed over, could have been wept over, such as the procession starting first with the wheel chairs, then those blinded, then the crutch line, then the gassed lines, which suited to create the saddest of pictures, where they could be amused.

When Miss Collins told of the "mental cases," the hearts of her hearers were torn over the flowers of our country who have been left with this stamp of indelible tragedy. Her amusing incident of the colored trooper, who crawled into the colonel's bed, after his ward in the hospital had burned down, brought laughter from her hearers, in spite of the fact that she told them the trooper had only one leg.

Miss Collins impressed upon her hearers that they should not forget that there has been a war, and in a manner convincing, modest and simple, she asked them to give sympathy and not pity to the men who return unfit for the duties which they were able to carry before.

It is justly said that the mirror reflects what it sees, and Miss Hazel Archibald was the mirror last night that brilliantly reflected for her hearers some of the things she saw during her work over the duties hanging from the paths of the boys who are sensible today and know nothing tomorrow. Miss Archibald had her hearers convulsed with such amusing anecdotes as one time when she was taken ill to a hospital, in which all sorts of diseases were cared for in one ward. The girl next to her had diphtheria. In order to keep the germs from Miss Archibald's bed, a sheet was hung from the ceiling.

A doctor, who was devoted to the night nurse, stopped to converse and carry on with her one evening, much to the amusement of the girls in the beds, who witnessed a love scene in shadowgraphs on the sheet, until one of the patients shouted, "For goodness sake, Doctor, go home. I've stood two reels of this picture, and can't stand another!"

Miss Archibald pleaded that the government go on with the vocational work that they had so intelligently started. Graphically and with a wit she inspired her audience with her fervent appeal to help the returned wounded.

Altho Miss Archibald passed through hardships over there, her manner of telling them was so amusing that it was felt she, too, like the boys in bed, has discovered a philosophy of life which few have. To hear her scintillating talk was a wonderful inspiration to her spell-bound hearers.

"Flowers Fields" set to music by J. Edward Butler, who accompanied the soloist on the organ, was sung by the Rev. W. H. Bliss, following which Mr. Peters concluded the program with an appeal for the crippled children of the Orthopedic Hospital. A silver offering was taken.

Mr. Donworth Gives Reception

One of the smartest events of the season was the reception given this afternoon by Mrs. George Donworth to honor Mrs. Charles T. Donworth and Mrs. Henry H. Judson. The hall in the Donworth home was lovely with white and pink peonies. The living room was a mass of yellow lilies, while the dining room was aglow with yellow Spanish lilies and pink sweet peas.

Assisting in the drawing room were Mrs. Harry Whitney Treat, Mrs. D. N. Baxter, Mrs. George H. Holliston, Mrs. Anna Blum, Mrs. John Collins, Mrs. Elbridge H. Stuart, Mrs. Thatchler Hodge, Miss Elma Collins, Mrs. Theodore Millard, of Portland, who has come to Seattle recently to make her home, Miss Katharine Collins and Miss Mary DeLaford.

At the tables were Mrs. G. Alston Hole, Mrs. Worrall Wilson, Mrs. Reginald H. Parsons, Mrs. L. C. Gilman, Mrs. M. J. Carkeek and Mrs. Raymond Frazier.

Miss Friedella Treat, Miss Anne Parsons and Miss Mary Donworth, three charming young misses, were in charge of the punch bowl.

Terrifying Discomfort From Skin Diseases

Itching and Burning Eruptions Torture Victims

Only those who are afflicted with Eczema, Tetter, Erythrasma, Boils and similar so-called skin diseases can appreciate the real terrifying discomfort that comes from these disorders. The constant plea of those afflicted is the oft-repeated question, "If I could find relief from this constant torture?" Not palliative, temporary relief that causes the terrible itching to abate for a while, but real, genuine relief that shakes off the shackles of the disease and restores the skin to its former healthy condition. "It is the most that can be expected from local treatment, such as ointments, salves, lotions, etc., which is one reason why these diseases seem to hang on with such tenacity. It is not because they are incurable, but because they are improperly treated, that they appear to be so stubborn and so difficult to cure.

The real cause of the disease is a germ in the blood, which multiplies by the million, and sets up an irritation in some tender location of the delicate skin.

You must locate the headquarters of the disease germs, and cut off their base of supplies. The blood is saturated with them, and they will set up their attacks on the surface of the skin as long as they remain in the blood, no matter how much local treatment you take.

A million gallons of local treatment applied to the surface of the skin, will not eliminate the germs of the disease from the blood, and until they are eliminated your skin will never be free from the itching and burning discomfort of the disease.

If you want relief that is permanent, then take a treatment that goes right to the seat of the trouble and removes its cause. Such a remedy is S. S. S., the reliable old blood purifier that every trace of disease germ is routed out, and a new supply of rich red blood is sent coursing thru the veins.

S. S. S. has been used successfully in some of the worst cases of eczema and other skin troubles, and it can be relied upon to cleanse the blood of the last vestige of the disease. S. S. S. is also a splendid tonic and system builder, and it builds up and adds new vigor to the whole system. Go to your drug store and get a bottle of S. S. S. today and begin the right treatment for skin disease. Then write for free medical advice about your own case. Address Chief Medical Adviser, 107 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga.—Advertisement.

Little Stories for Bedtime

Peter Hears Queer Noises

BY THORNTON W. BURGESS
(Copyright, 1919, by T. W. Burgess)

FOR a long time Peter Rabbit sat in Grandfather Chuck's old house between the roots of the Old Hickory Tree on the bank of the Smiling Pool. He felt quite sure that Reddy Fox had gone away, but he didn't mean to take any chances, and so he continued to sit where he was safe. After a while he began to hear faint little sounds, little taps, and scratching noises, as if made by claws. They seemed to come from right over his head, but he knew that there was no one in that hole but himself. He couldn't understand those noises at all. They made him nervous.

Finally Peter decided it would be safe to peek outside. Very carefully he poked his head out. Just as he did so a little chip struck him right on the nose. Peter pulled his head back hurriedly and stared at the little chip, which lay just a little way from the hole. Then several more little chips fell. Peter knew that they must come from up in the Big Hickory Tree, and right away he was all curiosity. Redwing was singing so happily that Peter felt sure no danger was near. So he hopped outside and looked up to try to find out where those little chips had come from. Just a few feet above his head was a round hole in the trunk of the Big Hickory Tree. While he was looking at it a head with a long, stout bill was thrust out, and in that bill were two or three little chips. Peter's heart gave a little jump of glad surprise.

"Yellow Wing!" he cried. "My goodness, how you startled me!"

The chips were dropped and the head was thrust farther out. The sides and throat were soft reddish-brown, and on each side, at the begin-

I DISCOVER CERTEIS PEARL HUNTING AND RECEIVE A MYSTERIOUS MESSAGE

"Who's your friend?"

Chry's voice startled me and I brought me out of the stars with which the Hun spy and I were hypnotizing each other.

"No friend—he looks like a thief—I once knew!" I said lightly. Then I challenged Chry with: "Comel I'll beat you to the boats!" But I didn't—because I fell.

Thereafter we perched in one of the rowboats while I emptied the sand from my oxfords. Then we basked in the sun and watched the sea. It was a very lazy sea that day, so the siren on the rocks at the right was still.

Away at the left was the giant pleasure wheel shining white in the sunlight with a new coat of very expensive paint.

And straight before me—in the sands at the bottom of the ocean—was a circle of dead men! I had seen them sewed up in coarse sacks and carried away in a boat straight out into the mist.

And now I knew that they had dropped out there as if to guard—a bride's wedding gift!

I shuddered—and then laughed hysterically!

I had picked up some tiny white pebbles. I treated them as something valuable—and handed them to Chry.

"Your Himeze pearls are lovelier, I suppose. But these will never bring their owner any unhappiness. Keep them!" I said very solemnly, yet all in an obvious joke.

Chry dropped the tiny stones into her bag.

"Seven! A magic number!" she said. "But I'd have you know, Jane, my dear, that the Himeze pearls never harm their owners. Don't worry about me. Only those who possess them unlawfully perish by them."

"I understand," I said, and I was truly solemn as I recalled the corpses which were guarding the gems as we talked.

"From time to time I had glanced over Chry's shoulder at the fisherman's hut, built on stilts, the swamp behind it and the sands in front.

At last the door was flung wide. The tenant came down the steps. From under the drooping brim of my hat I saw the silhouette of another man outlined in the cabin, between the door and a window beyond.

"Certeis," I gasped, almost loud. "What did you say, my dear?"

"Where is Hamilton Certeis, Chry?"

"Still in hospital. He writes that he'll be his 'old handsome self' in a week, when he will give himself the pleasure—"

"I didn't hear the rest. Evidently Hamilton Certeis would remain 'in hospital' until those jewels were brought up to the light of day. Two men and a rowboat, a diver's suit with an oxygen tank—the style Certeis had himself invented, and a rope ladder—then the psychological hour—and the Himeze gems would be in the hands of their owner! Well, it was to be hoped that the Hohemlern jewels, which would come up with them, didn't bear any special curse of their own.

If Hamilton Certeis were in that hut—it must have given him one hand of their owner! And I could give my poor dear Chry another grand shock—in two words!

But, that day, it was I who was to get the supreme shock.

By CYNTHIA GREY

Dear Miss Grey: We have bought a home in the country and wish to name it. Can you suggest some unusual names? MRS. R. T. J.

It would be difficult for one who has never seen this place and knows nothing about it, to select a suitable name for it. A distinctive name adds interest to a home, but a name should not be chosen merely because it is unusual, or because it is euphonious. The most important thing to remember is that the name should fit the place. Usually the most fitting name is one which calls attention to the most striking characteristic of the place. This may be the trees, a brook, lake, cliff, or beautiful view. As the chief interest so often centers in the trees, such names as "Elmwood" and "Maplehurst" are apt to become too common to be desirable. Be careful about such endings as "mere" and "wood." "Mere" should not be used unless there is a pond, marsh or bog; and the use of wood is not justified unless the place is wooded or gently sloping. There is a growing tendency to include a part of the family name in the name of the home, and one woman here achieved an unusual name for her country home by combining the first syllable of the names of her three sons.

Father Imposes Upon Daughter

Dear Miss Grey: I am a girl of 18. My father has two stores. He employs two men to run his meat-market, but leaves all the work and management of the smaller store to me. I open and close the place every single day, and have to stay there every Sunday. I don't get any pay and don't have any good times like other girls my age. I can't stand this any longer. Shall I leave home, or what shall I do? DORIS.

No, do not leave home. Have you discussed this matter fully with your father? Older persons sometimes are so pre-occupied with their work that, without any thought of being unkind, they overlook the fact that young people need recreation. Try to convince your father that you will have more interest and pleasure in your work if it is shared on a business basis, and ask him to pay you a definite sum each week, which will cover not only the cost of your clothes and occasional amusements, but will also permit you to save something. As to your hours, the law prohibits girls your age from working more than eight hours a day. Better remind your father of this fact.

To Secure Discharge

Dear Miss Grey: My fiance enlisted before war was declared on Germany. We waited until after the armistice was signed before marrying. My husband is now in Texas and has 10 months longer to serve. I would like to have him discharged, as I am no longer able to work. Ought I to write his commanding officer, or how should I proceed? MRS. L. K.

It would be better for your husband to take the necessary steps in this matter. If he wishes to be discharged, he should make application for discharge thru his company commander, on the grounds of having a dependent wife. You may be able to help by sending proof, in the form of the affidavit of responsible persons, that illness or distress actually exists in your home.

Awarding of Service Medal

Dear Miss Grey: Will you please tell me what is necessary to entitle a soldier to a Medal of Honor? JACK.

This medal is awarded to the soldier who, "in action involving actual conflict with an enemy, distinguished himself conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty.

So Much Bad in the Best

Dear Miss Grey: I am a girl of 16. None of my friends really pleases me. Just when I think I am going to like some one real well, I discover a fault in the person, and am so disappointed. How can I get over this? MARY.

Do not expect perfection in your friends. No one is without faults, and one of the tests of friendship is the ability to overlook these faults. Remember that you doubtless have as many faults as your friends. For instance, your disposition to be critical of others is a serious
