Confessions of a Bride

Copyrighted, 1919, by the Newspaper Enterprise Association

I ESCAPE BY AIRPLANE AND MAKE A STARTLING DISCOVERY I nodded an embarrassed acceptance of the obliging aviator's invitation. At that, the little Mexican maid who waited upon me and who had acted as an interpreter when the occasion required, slipped away from my side, and ran swiftly to the patio.

Was she a spy? The idea startled me. Had she been clever enough to catch the trend of the grand spectacle? Had she gone to warn the collapsed administrator?

In a word or two, I gave Morrison the hint—he passed it on to Jimmy, and a little flurry of haste accompanied the preparations for my flight.

Morrison strapped on my helmet while the pilot fished up a fuel-tined coat from the interior of his machine. In another instant I was lifted into the observer's seat and strapped to the same. And then as a matter of course—which it wasn't at all—I reached out for Baby Iabs!

But the old housekeeper had snatched her up—and my heart stopped its beating! Was the woman growing suspicious, too? Jimmy-boy, as usual, was equal to the occasion. In a lordly but most genial fashion he begged the privilege of taking up the child—for a mascot! And while he talked, he gently removed the little one from the old woman's arms, transferred her to mine, and bound her to me with a second belt!

And all the young ladies of San Jose regarded me with envy while Jim, splendid as a super-man, examined my safety straps.

"Courage, sissy!" he whispered. "Gosh, you're a game little girl!" "No thrills, this trip, Jim!" I warned him.

"Nary a blessed one, my dear," he answered. "Steady as—" An excited stirring of the crowd interrupted him. It began at the corner toward the road and rippled to the furthest corner of the field. It was caused by the sight of the auto wheeling into the road which connected the main thoroughfare with the hacienda.

Off went hundreds of sombreros and up went a grand huzza. A few of the servants scurried off to their proper stations in the establishment. I looked at Morrison and he nudged Jim. Evidently the mysterious personage who ruled destiny at the hacienda had come a little sooner than he was expected.

"Let her go, Jimmy dear! Let her go!" I pleaded, clutching Baby close to my heart.

Jim climbed into his seat and seized the joy stick. Morrison stepped away from the car to give us room. His right hand dropped into his gun pocket. He was guarding me to the last. And he saw, what I saw, the figure of the administrator emerging from the patio. Something was shining in his right hand. The long whine of a bullet close to my ears told me what it was. The "bus" began to taxi, and I couldn't see Morrison, but I knew he was too canny to get into trouble recklessly.

Jim is a person of much deliberation. He never moves quickly, but he never makes a useless or a futile movement. He taxied along a path parallel with the avenue down which the motor car was racing. The crowd accepted Jim's action as a little compliment to the master and roared its approval.

Jim stuck to the ground as if he, too, were determined to meet the mysterious owner of one of the greatest ranches in the world.

I never knew when the plane took the air, because in a flash, I had looked squarely into the bandit's splendid blue eyes—and passed on! I had come face to face with the lover who had wooed me in my girlhood, and with the enemy who had gone to meet death beneath the surface of the sea!

How had Hamilton Certes conquered death? Would I ever know the story? (To Be Continued)

Cynthia Grey— What Makes An Ideal Husband? DORIS KELLY SAYS "HONESTY"

DORIS KELLY. Actress in "A Voice in the Dark" believes honesty is most essential quality in an ideal husband.

BY DORIS KELLY A woman can forgive a husband for almost anything, except—dishonesty. Square dealing between husband and wife, I believe, is the cornerstone of marital success. The most essential single quality in the making of an ideal husband I should say is—HONESTY. A man may be bad tempered, impatient, roughly—all these things, bad as they may be in helping to spoil marital existence, a woman can forgive if necessary, but no self-respecting woman can forgive dishonesty. By honesty I mean not only integrity in his dealings with other men, and consequently a good name to pass down to his children, but also honesty in his dealings with her. A woman who feels that when her husband looks her in the eye and tells her a thing, she can depend upon that thing as absolutely true, has obtained a husband worth having. If I were called upon to name the single point in a husband more essential than any other, I should say "honesty" is that one.

Devoted Friend Proves Trifler Dear Miss Grey: I have been keeping company with a young man for two years. We are not engaged, but I thought he really cared for me. Recently my married sister came from another city to visit me. This young man invited her to accompany us to various entertainments. At a picture show one evening he attempted to hold her hand. Do you think he would have done this if he really cared for me? Should I give up his friendship because of this? ALICE.

This man's ungentlemanly conduct justifies you in questioning his sincerity and the depth of his regard for you. While you need not give up his friendship unless you wish to do so, you would do well hereafter not to take him too seriously.

Chief Events of War From U. S. Standpoint Dear Miss Grey: What is considered the chief event in the recent war from the American standpoint? This is a matter of opinion, but the draft seems to stand out as the single dominating event. Another accomplishment of striking magnitude is the transportation of 2,000,000 men overseas.

American Brewers Invade South America Dear Miss Grey: Is it true that many American brewers are establishing themselves in South America? LLOYD. During the war the German brewers were put out of business in much of South America, and American brewers, whose positions at home were becoming precarious, supplanted them. Finally when the breweries were closed in the United States, many of them were re-established in South America.

What Kind of Men Make the Best Husbands? What do YOU think? Miss Grey has asked a number of charming women to name the points they think an ideal husband should possess. Today Miss Doris Kelly, who picks an ideal husband in the drama, "A Voice in the Dark," gives her answer. What do YOU think? What is the most important characteristic a husband should possess? Write your opinion in 200 words and mail it to Miss Grey. The best opinions will be published. Miss Helen Worthing, starring at the new Capitol theatre, New York City, will give her Answer Monday.

Liquor Interests Continue Battle CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—Government officials here indicated today a temporary halt to prohibition enforcement may result from a petition to be filed here today for a temporary restraining order. Acting for Hannah & Herz, Chicago liquor dealers, Levy Mayer asked that District Attorney Clyne and Revenue collectors be restrained from interfering with the sale of 5,250 gallons of whiskey in his clients' possession. A hearing probably will be held early next week.
