HINTS ON YOUR HOME

BY DOROTHY FAY GOULD

"Living in a Glass House"

A Puget Sound "Glass House"

Living in a glass house. Do you live in a glass house? If you don't, you ought to.

Don't think the neighbors will throw stones. Quite the contrary, once they've been inside and sunned themselves.

In our climate you can't have too much glass, for glass means

A CITY OF Small Homes

The wonderful thing about Seattle, as I see it, in contrast to the many cities of the East, West and Europe, I have visited, is that the majority of homes are owned, Seaside has several elegant, expensive, extravagant houses than most other cities of its size, but many, many more comfortable, attractive homes, and literally thousands more small bungalows.

"In going out to the university I was struck with the fact that so much expert information was only available to students who won't be in the homebuilding game for ten years. There isn't any more when so many small homes are building and are to be built in the coming season, a little information on how to make a home permanently attractive and the best buy for the money would be useful to the home owner. It seems too bad only so few employ architects, so I thought a few hints would come in handy to check up the plan or picture for the new home in the light of standard facts known about homes by the experts."

—DOROTHY FAY GOULD.

light. The summers are never hot enough to make you regret your windows and the winters never cold enough to make an airtight house a necessity. If you must have a porch, put a glass roof on it to keep all the sun for your rooms. Once princes had more diamonds than windows and the proletariat and the bourgeoisie lived in dreary though picturesque little cottages that never dared become acquainted with the sun and fresh air. Now that glass is no more expensive than frame walls, why not make your cottage surpass the palaces of old? An open pergola roof on your porch for the rain to drip thru some festoons and the winters sunny south. Put a little glass between the beams and on the sides and enjoy your outdoor vine-covered room. People, like flowers, turn towards the sun. The few wise enough to have glass porches will always be found enjoying life in them. You will never regret putting your money in a glass house. Live within a glass house if you can.

By CYNTHIA GREY

Dear Miss Grey: I am interested in a girl, 18. She is a fine girl, but she is handicapped to a great extent by lack of education. This is not her fault, as she has no mother, and had little opportunity to go to school. She is capable in other ways, tho. With the help of her grandmother, she keeps house and takes care of three younger children.

She realizes that she is not as well educated as other girls, and it makes her unhappy. I have tried to make little suggestions to her that would benefit her, but this only makes her more sorry. She cries and tells me I should keep company with other girls, if she does not please me. I feel sorry for her, and would like to help her. Will you please suggest what I should do? HER FRIEND.

No matter how kindly your intentions, your friend naturally would be hurt by your suggestions, if she felt that that implied criticism of her. As she is sensitive concerning her lack of advantages, you should be very tactful in trying to help her.

If she discusses this matter freely with you, encourage her by telling her that many persons have been able, by later study and reading, to make up for lack of early educational opportunities.

Point out to her that her ability to keep house shows that she has valuable accomplishments that many girls her age do not have.

Explain to her, also, that the information she gets from current magazines and good books is just as important to her as knowledge learned from text books. You can help her by giving her books and magazines, and by encouragement and praise, rather than criticism.

Dear Miss Grey: My friend asked me what I wanted him to get me for Christmas. When I refused to say, he asked if he may give me money to buy something for myself, as he doesn't know if it may be to choose, and fears he might give me something I wouldn't like. What shall I tell him? MARY.

It would not be proper for you to accept a gift of money from your fiancé. Explain to him that you would prize his gift more if it were his selection. As many men are at a loss when they find it necessary to select gifts suitable for women, there is no reason why you should not express your preference in this matter, since your fiancé has asked you to do so. Of course, it would not be in good taste for you to suggest an expensive gift.

Dear Miss Grey: Will you kindly publish a recipe for grape fruit marmalade? MRS. T. Cook 4 grape fruit and 6 oranges separately in water to cover.

the housekeeper, in the hall near our room. "Did you see—the murdered lady?" This is the brief form of the question she whispered with elaborate Mexican politeness. "I saw nothing at all, Donna Camilla," Bob replied.

A queer smile which was almost a sneer spoiled the dame's aristocratic features. "The signora is white! Some wine!" asked Donna Camilla. "No, thank you. Mrs. Lorimer is only very tired. It is late. She will be all right as soon as she has had some sleep. Thank you, Donna Camilla," Bob made his best bow. As soon as we were alone, he explained in his own way.

"Jane, were you ever hypnotized? Ever in your life? For a joke? Or perhaps to cure a headache? Or maybe when a tooth was extracted? Think before you answer, darling!" (To Be Continued)

I AM PARALYZED BY THE SIGHT OF A MURDERED WOMAN

"A ghost? What are you talking about, Jane?" Bob held me tight and looked sharply into my face. "There isn't any ghost! There isn't any smoke, I tell you! Only a smear of moonlight on the dusty floor!"

"Jane Lorimer! What's the matter with you?" Bob's arms hurt me. "There isn't any ghost! There isn't any smoke, I tell you! Only a smear of moonlight on the dusty floor!"

By that time I was too frightened to speak. The thing which I saw with my two wide eyes had taken shape from a wavering cloud of smoke. It was the elegant figure of a real woman. Her trained and clinging gown made a graceful curve in the light of the moon. My eyes were held to that shape. I saw it emerge from the smoke and round itself from the flatness of the floor. The features of the face grew clearer and clearer. They were exactly those of the only woman I have ever detested. I seemed to be gazing on the fine profile of that dreadful rival of mine—the girl with the tawny tresses.

About the slender white throat of the figure was a dark and jagged stain; upon the breast, a dark stain. I was shaking with terror. I was cold to the bone. "Jane! Speak to me!" demanded my husband.

I couldn't move my lips. I couldn't turn my head, altho I longed to hide my face on his breast and so shut the horror out. I was stiff as one of the dead. Hand nor foot, I could not move. I was conscious that I was paralyzed—and quite unable to overcome my condition!

Bob shook me and shook me again. Then he kissed me, but I sorely heard his voice or felt his lips. Suddenly he stooped and picked up the electric fuse by the light of which he had made the fuse. Without a word of warning, he turned the glare of it squarely into my eyes. It hurt them. I closed them, shuddered in my husband's arms, caught my breath in short, hard gasps as a child does after a terrible fit of sobbing, and then my knees gave way beneath me.

When I came out of my swoon, I couldn't move my lips. I couldn't turn my head, altho I longed to hide my face on his breast and so shut the horror out. I was stiff as one of the dead. Hand nor foot, I could not move. I was conscious that I was paralyzed—and quite unable to overcome my condition!
