WORKERS BUILD "CO-OP" HOMES
Aim to Relieve Shortage in Boston

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 11.—Organized labor has entered the field of general contracting.

With the purpose of establishing itself as a real factor in the campaign to speed up house building and to relieve the present shortage, the Building Trades Union's Construction and Housing Council has been incorporated and is already on the job.

A complete set of officers, a staff of engineers and architects and a committee on financing, that has plans already developed for a co-operative bank, have been picked and 600 shareholders have signed up.

All of the building trades unions in Greater Boston sent five working men each to a conference. No union officials were invited. The incorporation resulted.

Thru the co-operative bank the council plans to finance the building of homes for members or outsiders, the bank taking the first mortgage.

At present the corporation is capitalized at $100,000, divided into shares of $10 each.

Material is being purchased in the open market, but a co-operative brick yard, gravel pit, lumber yard and a gradual expansion of the co-operative idea to other building materials, are planned for the future.

Union wages will be paid and union conditions observed.

A definite margin of profit for the council will be fixed by experiment and experience.

John F. Nason, president, says that operations will be confined to Boston and the few cities and towns in the immediate vicinity.

New York has, however, inquired into the plan and Worcester is contemplating the formation of a council.

The Wealth of the West

FUNDAMENTAL RESOURCES

The wealth of the West is fundamental. It is not dependent upon spasmodic prosperity or superficial industry, but swells steadily from the natural resources of the land. The world needs what the West has to offer for the purpose of food, clothing and shelter—the basic necessities of man.

The West cannot be robbed of its riches, nor can business and economic conditions do more than temporarily retard the natural rewards of its inheritance from its fields and rivers, forests, mines and factories.

This bank has confidence in the future of the West and embarks upon another year with a feeling of conservative optimism.
