

Cynthia Grey:

Serious Young Man Annoyed by Anonymous Phone Calls—Thinks of Leaving Position Because of It.

Dear Cynthia Grey: I am a serious young man employed in a public office, and of late have been tormented past all endurance by different girls, three of them that persist in phoning me at all times during working hours. I have tried my best to locate them, and without success, and when I hang up on them they are not the least discouraged, but ring me up later and try to get me to date them out, and since this is impossible, "jazz me alone" (to use one girl's expression) and cause me much mental unrest.

I have seriously considered quitting my position and taking something entirely different, but am in doubt as to whether I could find anything as suitable as the place I am in now. Can you advise me how to put a stop to this annoyance?

My dear friend, what you want to do is to cultivate a sense of humor. I should say you are serious! And these foolish young things probably do you not as serious, but as priggish, and that is the reason they find amusement in tormenting you. If they thought it didn't annoy you at all, they would find no sport in it. Can't you answer them in the same vein in which they talk to you? I believe that would soon stop them. They are probably quite young girls, who find this sort of thing highly entertaining.

Since they must take up a good deal of your time, why not let your employer know about it, as you obviously waste much of his precious time, and perhaps he can arrange it so you won't have to answer the phone.

But, for your own sake, don't be so serious; else you will find life's bumps are pretty hard if you don't know how to smile as you take them.

Formula for Vegetable Hair Dye

Dear Miss Grey: Can you give the formula for a harmless vegetable hair dye? Where can I obtain walnut juice? HARRIET.
You do not state the color you wish. If brown, walnut skins beaten to a pulp, 1 oz.; rectified spirit, 16 oz. This is said to be perfectly harmless. If an asbun brown shade is desired it may be obtained by using an infusion of henna leaves, strained, and the liquor evaporated so as to represent 1 to 2, to which 2 fl. oz. of alcohol are added, and filtered thru paper. If a darker shade is desired, add a small amount of ammonia. You can probably buy walnut juice from any drug store.

John Jay First Supreme Court Justice

Dear Miss Grey: Who was the first chief justice of the U. S. supreme court? M. R. L.
John Jay of New York.

Quakers Used Wooden Guns

Dear Miss Grey: What are Quakers guns? F. B.
Wooden guns used to deceive the enemy as to the artillery strength of their opponents.

Unicorn Merely a Fabled Animal

Dear Miss Grey: Is it true that a fossil unicorn has been found? FRED.
The unicorn is a fabled animal said to resemble a horse with one horn on the forehead. This fable may have arisen owing to the fact that a species of antelope was often represented on Egyptian monuments usually in profile, so that it seemed to have one horn. Of course no fossil of a unicorn has ever been dug up.

Managing Editor

A woman whose address I have misplaced, recently asked me who was managing editor of the San Francisco Chronicle. At the time she asked, the appointment had not been made. I have just learned that the place has been given to Arthur E. Clarke, recently assistant managing editor of the New York Evening World, and previously city editor of the Chicago Herald up to the time that paper was bought by the Hearst interests and consolidated with the Examiner.

SEATTLE WOMAN GAINS 15 POUNDS ON TWO BOTTLES

Friends Say Mrs. Ventura Looks Like a Different Person Since Taking Tanlac

"I have just finished my second bottle of Tanlac and have gained all of fifteen pounds in weight," was the remarkable statement made the other day by Mrs. Verne Ventura, 228 1/2 Fairview Ave., Seattle.

"For years," said Mrs. Ventura, "my nerves just kept me in misery. My circulation was poor, my blood was thin and I felt chilly all the time. Any little exertion would make my back hurt like it was breaking in two. At night I would be awake by the hour and frequently wouldn't close my eyes all night long. I lost weight and strength and became so pale and thin that everybody noticed it. I felt miserable all the time, and I think such a deplorable condition that life seemed hardly worth living.

"But I had heard Tanlac so highly recommended I decided to try it and it proved to be just what I needed. I always have a good appetite now, enjoy every mouthful I eat, and it all comes with me perfectly. I am no longer nervous, sleep fine and never have any pains in my back. All my friends tell me I look like a different person altogether, and that's just the way I feel. Tanlac is just wonderful, and I will always have a good word for it."

Tanlac is sold in Seattle by the Bartlett Drug Stores and leading druggists.—Advertisement.

"Supper time and Harry's father came in. 'Where's the boy?' he asked, the first thing. 'I don't know,' snapped the stepmother. 'I sent him out after the cows. He's taking his time about coming back.' 'The father went to the door and looked out. 'Which way did he go?' he asked. 'Why the way he always goes. I suppose. He ought to know where to go by this time; he's been getting them for some time.' 'They ate supper in silence, and still Harry didn't return. When they were quite thru the father got his hat and said, 'Guess I'll go out and find the boy and help him in with the cows.' 'His face did not look as calm as his voice sounded and he hurried away as if he felt the need of racing with the fast-coming darkness. 'Harry?' he called. 'Harry, O Harry! The woods and the dusk gave back no answer. 'Down to the creek he went and found the print of little bare feet, just as Harry had found the print of the cows' hoofs. But the little footprints turned and led off into the woods. 'Calling and peering, peering and calling into the shadows of the forest, the father went, fear growing fast in his breast. When it was quite dark he went home for a lantern and they called the neighbors to help. 'How little the boy seemed, how helpless! The men made a plan of search and separated, agreeing to fire a shot in the air if anyone should find the child. 'All night they searched and when the stars grew pale and the sun began to paint the Eastern sky a faint pink they returned to the quiet house and looked at each other in dismay. 'The night was gone; it was another day, and the child was lost. While they talked in lowered voices and tried to think what to do next, they saw the little fellow come walking in. 'I got myself lost,' he said, 'and I didn't know the way out in the dark and I slept all night in the woods and I'm hungry!'

19. DOT CRIES AND I APOLOGIZE

I was eating breakfast the next morning when Dot came in with an air of the wildest excitement. 'What on earth made you say that to mother last night?' she demanded. 'I pretended to be very much interested in opening an egg. 'Say what?' 'Tell her to go home.' 'I suppose I thought she would be happier there.' 'Tom, how could you do a thing like that? Why I had to beg and beg mother before she would promise to stay. She was going right back, but I—' 'I suppose you had to beg her very hard.' 'I did, and I had to promise that you would apologize for what you said. Do you think people will stay under your roof if you treat them like that?' 'I pushed my chair back from the table. 'Look here, don't you think it would be a good idea if you consulted me before making any promises on my behalf? It just happens that I have not the slightest intention of apologizing to anyone. 'As soon as your parents stepped off the train they began to bully and badger me. It's an old trick of theirs and I'm not going to stand it any longer. It's bad enough that my salary has been cut without them rubbing it in.' 'That's just it—you're angry about that and instead of saying something to the firm you're taking your spite out on poor mamma! I should think you'd be too much of a man to do that! If only for my sake—' and here Dot burst into tears. 'I suppose Dot does not cry any more than any other married woman, but her tears have the habit of coming just in the nick of time. Whenever she is having the worse of an argument they gush up and they usually settle the matter in her favor. 'I stood it for a few seconds this time, then said: 'Oh, come on, stop crying. What on earth do you want me to do?' 'I—I said you'd apologize.' 'I would have given every cent I had to get out of doing it, but there Dot's tears would hold out for a week if I didn't. So I strode into the living room where I heard her parents talking. At my entrance they suddenly became dumb and stared at me without saying a word. They were careful not to do anything that would make my pill less bitter to swallow. 'I'm sorry I lost my temper last night,' I said curtly. 'You are quite welcome to stay here as long as you please.' 'I strode out of the room without waiting for any reply. To Dot I said: 'I've done it. Now forget about it. I expect to work pretty hard today and I probably won't be able to get home for dinner.' 'I had no idea where I was going, but I felt that after being with my parents-in-law for 30 minutes the previous evening and for 30 seconds that morning, I deserved a vacation. (To Be Continued.)

THE TWINS RETURN

The Fairy Queen called Flippety-Flap and the twins to her.

When old Tag Tiger was wiping his whiskers all purry-purry like, after a good supper of beautiful beef-steaks and roasts and all the things he liked best, and what what a great old goose he'd been all these weeks to try to make his own living in the jungle, the Fairy Queen called Flippety-Flap and the twins to her, where she sat on her throne with the Magical Mushroom beside her.
