1,500 IN FREE SWIM CLASS
No More Enrollments Will Be Allowed

With more than 1,500 Seattle kiddies enrolled in the city's free swimming classes, Instructor Ernie Wells announced Wednesday that further registrations would not be accepted.

"I am sorry that we will be unable to take care of beginners from this time on," Wells declared, "but the work is progressing so rapidly that we will be unable to undertake the instruction of new pupils."

It is estimated that practically all of the pupils now enrolled in the classes will be able to swim before the conclusion of the course.

Thursday's classes are as follows: North Green Lake, boys, 10 a. m. to 11:30 a. m.; girls, 11:30 a. m. to 1:30 p. m.
South Green Lake, boys, 10 to 11 a. m.; girls, 11 to 12 p. m.

Street Car Killing Probed by Coroner
An inquest to fix responsibility for the death of Mrs. Jessie Waugh and Mrs. O. B. Hattlemark, who were instantly killed Friday evening by a Rainier ave. street car, was to be held Wednesday morning by Coroner W. H. Corson.

The third member of the party, Chris Hoyda, who was at first thought fatally injured in the accident, is in a critical condition in city hospital.

SPECULATORS GARNER FORTUNES FROM U. S. SHIP SUPPLY CREDIT

By J. F. Richardson
(Formerly a member of the U. S. Shipping Board special investigating committee and an expert on shipping affairs)

SAN FRANCISCO, July 20.—Three hundred and fifty millions worth of surplus ship materials, paid for by the people, made the plaything of junk ring speculation, while utter incompetence in keeping of accounts resulted in errors amounting to the millions.

Materials diverted two and three times in transit, finally used in boats and settlements made for the boat construction, still charged on shipping board books to the original consignee instead of the actual consumer, two years after shipment.

Millions of dollars' worth of material sold to the junk ring on resale credit basis without proper security, serving the ends of speculators.

Materials in the millions sold, and sales not credited on the headquarters material books.

Bids for supplies refused, the supplies immediately sold to lower bidders, and by them resold to the higher bidders at a profit.

These amazing admissions are made by H. B. Miller, former director of the shipping board supply and sales department.

When H. B. Miller succeeded J. Lee Allen as director of shipping board supply and sales department, while the Harle lump sum sale of materials was pending, Miller found the books and accounts of the department "in rotten shape," according to his admissions.

HUGE PRIVATE PROFITS FROM RESALE PLAN
He found, he says, the junk ring—the most active plunderband at work on America's war remnants—had managed to bring about a resale basis—which still exists—which caused and is causing the people gigantic losses, and resulted in the government holding for these speculators materials which could have been sold on a high market—while the speculators went out to find buyers, and after selling the supplies at big profits, came back to the shipping board and purchased.

The resale basis works this way: Millions of dollars' worth of supplies were and are stored in warehouses and at yards on the Pacific coast, at Cleveland on the Great Lakes, at Wilson's Point, Sparrows Point, New York, New London and Boston on the Atlantic coast and all along the Gulf coast as well.

Millions of dollars' worth of supplies were and are stored in warehouses and at yards on the Pacific coast, at Cleveland on the Great Lakes, at Wilson's Point, Sparrows Point, New York, New London and Boston on the Atlantic coast and all along the Gulf coast as well.

Next they would purchase materials on credit, to be paid for as moved.

Then, while the shipping board held these materials paid $14,000,000 annual overhead in supply and sales department, paid thousands and hundreds of thousands in warehouse and yard storage rentals on these materials, the speculators—in some cases using the supply and sales department—would find purchasers for this material at huge profits—sometimes 100 to 200 per cent—and would sell the supplies.

SHIP BOARD SHOULD HAVE HAD PROFITS
When the sale was made the speculator would have delivery made to the final purchaser from the shipping board warehouses, and would then pay supply and sales department for such material as had thus been sold.

Miller admits that thru the supply and sales department these same materials could have been sold for account of the shipping board at the same prices secured by the speculators.

In other cases, when the market sagged, and while the materials depreciated, the speculators did not carry out their contracts and the people were left "holding the bag."

A case in point is the sale of oakum in the Gulf and South Atlantic districts.

Evidence adduced before the congressional investigating committee, and now admitted by Miller to be true, showed thousands of tons of oakum quoted in the latter part of 1920 at 23 cents a pound sold at the time to Dietz & Co., of New York, for 7 1/2 cents a pound.

Representatives of the supply and sales department at New Orleans previously had sold this oakum to Ness & Co., of Savannah, at 9 1/2 cents a pound, and had taken Ness' certified check to bind the deal.

The Ness sale was canceled by the Washington office of the supply and sales, and three days later this oakum was sold to Dietz for 7 1/2 cents, and immediately resold by Dietz to Ness for 9 1/2 cents.

At this time the shipping board was buying oakum at 22 cents a pound, in some cases paying repair men 10 per cent profit for making the purchase.

Millions of dollars' worth of materials sold had not been entered on the Washington books as sold at all, and stood still charged as surplus on hand.
