Cynthia Grey:

Girl Writes of Brother Who Must Have Morphine— Fears Physician Gives Him More Than Is Necessary and Asks What to Do.

Dear Cynthia Grey: My brother has been ill for a number of years, finally submitting to two major operations during the war. At times he suffers terribly and finally the attending physician gave his wife morphine to administer during his attacks of suffering. Everything went lovely as long as my sister-in-law would give him a hypo when it was necessary. After a few months he decided that he was a better judge of when he needs help than his wife, but she pluckily refused to let him have it for self administration, so he promptly went to the physician and got his own morphine, not letting his wife know anything about it. When she found out about it she remonstrated with him and tried to show him what a powerful drug he was using and how he could not get the small amount of vitality he had left so that he would not get well.

All she got for her pains was abuse and he said that he didn't intend to beseech his wife to give him medicine.

Now my sister-in-law has been the mainstay financially and cared for him like a baby besides raising her little family; she is trying to save enough money now to take him to the Mayo sanitarium. I asked her why she don't demand that the doctor stop giving the drug to him and she said she was afraid that her husband would need it sometime and she could not get it and then he would die and that would make her feel that she was responsible for his death. I advised her to talk it over with the doctor.

She said: "I asked the doctor if it was all right for him to have the drug and the doctor said it was all right. Then I asked the doctor how could we ever get the drug out of his system and the doctor said that he would get over it."

Now I could add a great deal more, how she has given him a sterile hypo when he was moaning and groaning in terrible pain and he has gone to sleep and slept the night thru; of the pitiful stories of his intense suffering and that he would die if he did not have that morphine right then. But surely physicians ought to be wise to those pleas. I never knew her to fail to give the drug when it was absolutely necessary and it is really uncanny how she knows when

THE ONE-MAN WOMAN

BY RUTH AGNES ABELING

CHAP. 10—THE WOMAN A MAN LOVES BEGIN HERE TODAY

The life of KATE WARD had been filled with tragedy, but now she thought the climax was reached. In childhood she had quarreled with her mother and then fled from her home to the great city, where she met, loved and married.

DAN WARD. Now he was dead and she had returned to find that her mother also had died and that her father, old JURIST PARSONS, needed her care. This was sad enough, but then came CHINATOWN ALICE, with her little baby, to announce to Kate that Dan Ward, the dead husband, was the father of Alice's child. In her sleep that night, Kate woke with the conviction that a voice had been trying to tell her about an old trunk.

GO ON WITH THE STORY

Justin glanced anxiously at his daughter during breakfast. Her face bore evidence of the night she had spent. Old Parsons knew that all was not going well.

The "shining morning face" breaks into smiles and the unwilling step to school is quickened when the schoolboy's bread is spread with Miss Grey will receive callers in her office Monday, Wednesday and Friday, from 1 to 3 p. m., and on Tuesday and Thursday from 11 a. m. to 12 m. each week. Please do not come at other times, as it seriously interferes with her writing.

He needs her. I have seen her awaken from a sound sleep and go to his aid before he knew himself that he was about to have a bad attack.

Now isn't there some way that those doctors giving him the drug could be restrained, even if they do think that he is incurable? Oughtn't a law be passed prohibiting any physician letting a patient himself have dangerous drugs? I don't mean that they must go to a doctor or nurse in such a case as this, but why not let the nearest relative of such a person have it in their care? Surely a person ill enough to need such drugs is ill enough to have someone else administer it. I understand that a county nurse can give narcotics, why should not the wife as long as she is capable, get a certain supply regularly and make her responsible? Please do not publish my name.

No reputable physician would give your brother more morphine than he should have. If you feel sure he is receiving more, you should go down to the bureau of internal revenue, report the case to them and let them check up on the physician. Every physician who receives drugs in a legitimate manner, must sign for them, so you can easily see how this would prevent him from giving his patients over-doses.

I do not feel that it would be a wise plan to permit any one other than a physician or a trained nurse to handle narcotics.

Christmas Suggestions for Mother, Aunt or Married Sister

Dear Miss Grey: Will you help a poor fellow out by printing suggestions as to gifts for mother, an aunt or married sister and oblige.

BILL.
Here they are: Salad set, embroidered luncheon set, candlesticks, handbag, books, book ends, neckwear, case, sewing basket, desk set, scarf, carved medallion on black silk cord, beads, box of candies, gloves, silk hose, shopping list, photograph records, perfume, handkerchiefs, slippers, or umbrella.

Would Remove Birthmark

Dear Miss Grey: I have a birthmark on the side of my face, and I would like to know if they have ever been removed successfully, how, and by whom. I will look for your answer.

E. B.
That depends largely on the mark. Some have been successfully removed through a surgical operation. You should consult a reliable surgeon and make sure he is first class. He will advise you.

Query About Harry K. Thaw

Dear Miss Grey: Will you please state the name of the man who killed Stanford White in the Madison Roof Garden and who later married Evelyn Nesbit?

Z. R.
Harry K. Thaw.

To Eat Oyster Cocktail

Dear Miss Grey: Will you please tell me if an oyster cocktail when served at dinner should be eaten with an oyster fork or a cocktail spoon?

M. M.
There isn't any such thing as a "cocktail spoon" so far as I know. Oyster cocktail should be eaten with an oyster fork.

Family to Get Together Christmas

"So you're going to have a family reunion this year, Tom? That's mighty fine. Christmas ought to mean a lot to you this year."

"Yes, it will. My mother and father came out from the East for the remainder of the winter last week, and you know my brother, whom I haven't seen for ten years, has located in Portland within the past few weeks, and he will be here with his family."

"Say, you will have a real family gathering, won't you? I wish you joy."

"Yes, we've been busy buying Christmas presents all round, and have a turkey ordered. The kiddies are hysterical with joy already. But how about your Christmas? What are you up to this year?"

"Guess we'll have a quiet one at home this year. The wife's sister, at Bellingham, wants us to come up, but it would mean a new suit for me and a dress for her, and we can hardly afford them before the first of the year."

"That's a shame. You'd better find some way to get the clothes and run along. Too bad to mope around alone."

"Yes, I know. We had about decided to go, and may yet."

"Say, why don't you and your wife go to Cherry's, and get the clothes you need? That way it is only necessary to pay a comparatively small sum down. The rest is paid on monthly installments, you know, after the first of the year. And, by the way, they have one-third off on suits and dresses, even now, before January 1st. They are at 1015 Second ave., in the Blatto building, between Madison and Spring, just over the Pig'n Whistle. Take elevator."

He said nothing, however. He was one of those rare people who instinctively know when silence is truly golden.

At length Kate, herself, began to talk.

"Father," she said, "do you know anything about a trunk—or has anything ever happened in the family which involved a trunk?"

"No, child," mild surprise in his tone.

"Have we ever lost a trunk—or have we one stored away somewhere?"

"Katie, girl, your old father has done so little traveling in his life that he never had need for more than a carpet bag! Your mother and I never owned a trunk in our lives!"

The thought passed without a smile. Kate's heart was too heavy for smiling. Her brain was busy on things of the past. She was turning over the matter of Chinatown Alice and Dorothy and Dan's feeling for them.

"After all—why should he have cared more for me?" Kate was thinking aloud.

Justin caught the train of her thought.

"He would have cared more for you, Katie, just as naturally as flowers turn toward the sun."

"You are the kind of woman men love. You're not the kind they flirt with, not the kind with whom they make loud carousal and who then sink, nameless, into oblivion."

"You are the kind of woman a man wants to be a daughter to his mother and mother to his children."

"There are women and—there are women," Justin was reminding, "there are chatter boxes who at eventide torment you with details of a day's shopping or the illness of some detested relative, there are those who never find a circumstance or condition quite as they want it and who insist upon mouthing the thing over."

"And then, Katie," slowly, "there are those like yourself, who form, unknowingly, a golden band which spans the world of men—the women of the quiet heart—women who can accept their disappointments in silence and rise above them, women who understand the need of silence by men who would be great."

"The fearful woman, who, amid earth's riot, is eloquently quiet; knowing that silence means, not being dull."

But like the sunlight, bright and beautiful—

"That's the woman who holds not only man's love, Katie, but the love of every living creature—dogs and birds and children and—men. You're that kind of woman, child."

"And so Dan would have had to love you more than the others."

As the old man finished speaking a neighbor passing in the road whistled.

"Letter for you!" he called as Kate appeared in the door.
