SAVED BY PRESENCE OF MIND.

Measures of a Georgia Father in Treating a Rattlesnake Bite—Sucks Out the Poison.

John Padgett is the name of a mountain hero who lives six miles from Cartersville, Ga. The other day he left his home to go over the mountain in his wagon. His ten-year-old boy Ernest accompanied him. The boy dropped behind the wagon and began walking after it. A small ground rattlesnake was lying in the road. The mules passed over it and angered it greatly. The boy, walking close behind the wagon, did not see the reptile until it struck him on the foot, fastening its fangs deep into the flesh that he could not kick it loose. He ran screaming after the wagon, dragging the squirming reptile with him. The father jumped from the wagon and killed the snake. His trousers were fastened with a hemp string in place of a suspender. Quick as possible he disengaged this and wrapped it tightly just above the bite. Then he put his lips to the wound and sucked out as much of the poison as possible. As soon as home was reached a messenger was sent to Cartersville for Dr. Guffin. He went out and found the boy's foot as cold as a corpse, the circulation having stopped. The necessary attention was given, but the father's presence of mind saved the boy's life.

ABOLISHED THE LOCK-STEP.

Indiana Penitentiary Authorities Decide to Do Away with It.

After years of experience with the so-called lock-step, the authorities of the Indiana penitentiary have determined to abolish that custom. Their reasons are clear. Convicts who were incarcerated for only a short term were made to march in that unnecessary fashion without lasting injury to themselves. Time was in their favor. But it was learned through long and deliberate observations that those who had to undergo some years of that particular kind of walking left the institution with a shuffling gait which they never afterward lost. The experienced eye could pick them out at sight. As the purpose of imprisoning men and women is to reform rather than to make permanent "crooks" of them, the authorities concluded that it would be only decent to abolish the step and humane men will appreciate the decision, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. It prevented many ex-convicts from obtaining employment and never had any remedial value.
