

BATTLE AGAINST MENTAL DISEASE GREAT PROBLEM

Insanity Making Great Inroads Upon the Health of the Nation.

LONG BEEN STUDY OF MEDICAL MEN

Indiana is Leading the Way in the Fight to Prevent Propagation of Feeble Minded—Laws Enacted to Prevent Marriage of Persons Not Mentally Sound—Colonization of the Feeble Minded is One Plan Proposed.

By Frederic J. Haskin.

The proceedings of that section of the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography which deals with the prevention of mental diseases will be ranked among the most interesting features of the sessions of the big organization. Along with other non-contagious diseases, insanity is making heavy inroads upon the health of the nation. While the sick rate and the death rate from all germ-caused diseases is constantly declining through the increasing effectiveness of hygienic measures, the opposite is true of those diseases which are not caused by germs, and notably true of mental diseases. It has been shown, for instance, that there are approximately three times as many insane people in the United States today as there were before the civil war in proportion to population.

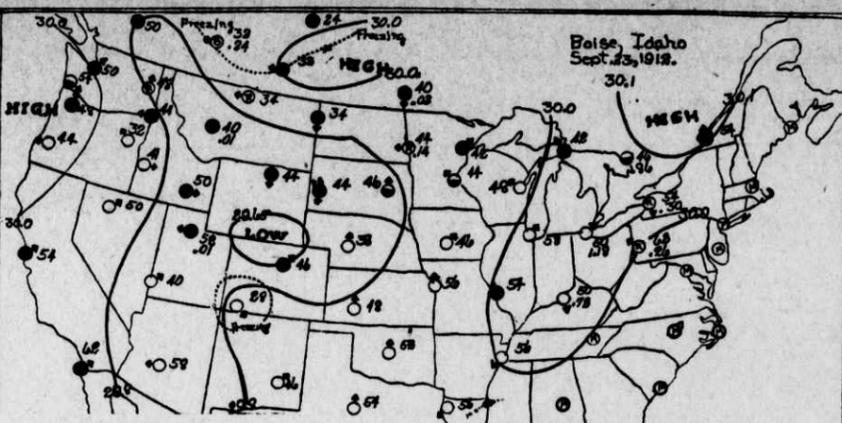

The United States now has a national organization for the extension of hygienic measures against mental diseases, and it will tell, through one of its leading members, just what has been accomplished along that line. It is generally recognized that there are now numerous preventable causes of mental unbalance, such as too free use of intoxicants, the marriage and rearing of families by weak-minded people, morbid surroundings, and the like. A study of the causes and an effort to assess the responsibility that shall be laid at the door of each, will be one of the features of the discussion. It also has come to be understood that thousands who formerly were given up to be hopelessly insane may be treated in such a way as to restore their mental balance and make them useful members of society. At the government hospital for the insane at Washington a system of prolonged cross-examination to find the real cause of the victim's delusions has been resorted to, and once the doctors are able to hit upon the idea that threw the victim's mind off its balance, success frequently attends their efforts to break down the delusion.

Long Studied by Educators. Feeble-mindedness has long been the study of educators and medical men, with a view both to alleviating the condition of those who suffer and to prevent the birth of feeble-minded children. In order to get at the subject properly it was decided by the English royal commission on the feeble-minded to define its varying degrees. To those who from birth or an early age are so defective that they are unable to guard themselves against common physical dangers it gave the name of "idiot." An "imbecile" it defined as one incapable of earning a living but capable of guarding against ordinary physical dangers. Those who are able to earn their own living under favorable circumstances, but who, from birth or early age are incapable of managing themselves and their affairs with ordinary prudence, it called "morons." It has been estimated that the proportions of the people of weak-mindedness from the above are about as follows: Idiots, 25 per cent; imbeciles, 50 per cent; and morons, 25 per cent.

The moron is pronounced the worst drag upon society, since few people recognize him as really feeble-minded, but regard him as only a stupid person, with too much sense to be called crazy and too little to be called strong-minded. Usually he becomes either a pauper or a criminal. It has been found by investigation by the famous Galton laboratory that there are many paupers in the almshouses of England whose parents, grand-parents, and great-grand-parents were paupers before them. Heretofore little hope has been held out of eliminating feeble-mindedness. Because no one had yet found a cure, it was presumed that no cure could be found—a line of reasoning that would have been fatal to the hopes of finding all great cures for disease we use today had it been followed. In the case of idiots it has been agreed that the only hope there is of their elimination is by eugenics, since the defective nature of their brain tissues, which has been shown by examination, leads to the conclusion that the mental processes could not take place in them.

One of the causes of feeble-mindedness in childhood is the absence, or a diseased condition, of the thyroid gland—the gland whose enlargement causes goitre. It has been found that treatment with thyroid extract will usually restore the victim to health and normal-mindedness. It has been suggested that a large number of cases of feeble-mindedness that set in when the child is from 10 to 14 years of age may be caused by some similar physical condition. It is not improbable that research along this line will be diligently pursued in the hope of finding the cause of such feeble-mindedness and recognizing the symptoms of its onset in time to adopt preventive measures. It is now generally conceded to be that the major portion of the

WEISER DECLARES FOR BITULITHIC.

Contract Let for Street Pavement After a Long Investigation.

The list of progressive cities of the Pacific northwest has another important addition, insofar as formal notice is concerned by the announcement of the choice Weiser has made as the material to be used for paving her streets.

Weiser has not only decided to pave extensively but she has decided to use the very best kind of pavement. Extensive investigations have been conducted all summer in cities and towns where various kinds of pavements are in use, in order to have it known positively which is the most noiseless, the most dustless, the least slippery, the one that requires the least repair work, and one that develops the fewest cracks and chuck-holes.

All friends of quality and sympathy with the policy of giving reward to the basis of merit, will be glad to take note of this victory for bitulithic in Weiser.
