

ALL COUNTIES IN STATE READY FOR LOAN DRIVE

Organization Is Practically Complete for Campaign in Idaho for the Second Liberty Loan.

List of County Chairmen Is Announced by State Chairman Davis — Members of Committee Represent All Parts of the State.

Practically all county chairmanships for the liberty loan organization were filled by the state organization Saturday. The men who have been placed at the head of the county committees will at once make up their own organizations and it is expected that within a few days the campaign to sell Idaho's allotment of the second liberty loan will be in full swing. D. W. Davis, the state chairman, has been at his headquarters in the Overland building day and night perfecting the plans for the statewide organization. He is highly pleased with the cooperation he has received and is determined that the state shall do all that is asked of it.

H. S. Boone, representative of the San Francisco federal reserve bank, looks forward to a successful campaign. "We are going to have a splendid state organization," said he, "and I am sure that the results of the campaign will be all that is expected. The members of the state committee are representative of all of Idaho and they are all enthusiastic and eager to make a success of the undertaking."

Members of the state committee and others will next visit every county in Idaho for the purpose of enlisting and working with the various county organizations. Senator W. E. Borah will give a part of his time to the work and in all addresses to be made by him he will urge the people to get behind the government in the matter of war finances. Other speakers will travel over the state to help keep up interest in the campaign.

Cyrus Pierce, of California, will be at Pocatello on October 10 to make an address and on the following day he will be in Nampa, Caldwell or Boise. He will then go to the state of Washington for a speaking campaign in the interests of the bond issue. The state committee is made up of D. W. Davis, chairman, American Falls; E. M. Hoover, secretary, Boise; H. S. # "Eat Plenty, Wisely, Without Waste," Says Hoover

Work of the Food Administration Under Herbert C. Hoover - A War Emergency Measure - America's Food Problems - Woman's Part.

SOME WEEKS AGO every woman in the country was asked to sign a pledge-card asking her to join the Food Administration in Washington in the service of food conservation in the United States as far as circumstances permitted. While most women signed the cards because they knew that the cause to which they were pledging themselves was a right and righteous one, many of them know little of what the Food Administration is and what it is trying to do.

The Food Administration is a war emergency measure inaugurated by the President of the United States for the control and conservation of food during the war so that this nation may not suffer from the prevailing shortage of foodstuffs now or in the future; and also that those nations with which the United States is allied in the war who are short of foodstuffs may be aided by this country.

Who Is Hoover?

The man who was appointed by the President to undertake the all important task of food administration is Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, born in Iowa, graduate of Stanford University, California, mining engineer by profession, so far as possible, upon the same volunteer basis. He has expressed his confidence that this difficult matter of food administration can be successfully administered through the voluntary cooperation and direction of legitimate distributors of foodstuffs and with the help of the women of the country. The proposed food administration is intended, of course, only to meet a manifest emergency, and to continue only while the war lasts.

Mrs. Henrietta W. Calvin, Specialist in Home Economics

America's Food Problems.

In accepting President Wilson's request to become head of the food administration Mr. Hoover stated that it was entirely upon the assumption that Congress would grant broad powers to the President on which a competent administration could be set up. "I hold strongly to the view that while large powers are necessary for minority cases they will probably need but little application, for the vast majority of the producing and distributing elements in the country are only too willing and anxious to serve our national necessities."

In presenting America's problem in a general way Mr. Hoover stated that this country normally produces a surplus of most commodities, and that her problem is to secure the effective and economical distribution of these supplies, to induce as large an export surplus for the benefit of her allies as possible, to protect our own requirements, to ask the whole community to assist in building up this surplus by every effort of economy that can be devised, and to set up such machinery as will furnish this balance wheel on prices.

"At best the food of our allies will be a privation loaf," he says, "and every ounce we can add to it is a contribution to her strength and constancy in the war."

The five cardinal principles of food administration in America as represented by Mr. Hoover are:

First. That the food problem is one of wise administration and not expressed by the words "dictator" or "controller," but "Food Administrator."

Second. That this administration should be largely carried out through the coordination and regulation of the existing legitimate distributive agencies of the producers, distributors and consumers.

Third. The organization of the community for voluntary conservation of foodstuffs.

Fourth. That all important positions, so far as may be, shall be filled with volunteers.

Fifth. The independent responsibility of the food administration directly under the President, with the cooperation of the great and admirable organization of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, the Federal Trade Commission, and the railway executives.

Four Great Branches At Work.

"I conceive that the essence of all war administration falls into two phases," said Mr. Hoover. "First centralized and single responsibility. Second, delegation of this responsibility to decentralized administrative organs."

A brief outline of Mr. Hoover's view of food administration is a division of the work into four great branches. In the first branch would be set up a certain number of separate executive bodies for regulation and administration of certain critical commodities, and these should be organized on the normal lines of our commercial institutions with a board of directors, a president, and executive officers who will work out problems involved in these commodities and will institute such measures as may be necessary to with our allies in many important questions involving exports from this country and our common import from other countries.

In line with the third division of Mr. Hoover's program was the recent request made of every American woman to join as an actual member of the food administration and give her pledge that as far as seems and circumstances will permit she will carry out the instructions which will be sent her in detail from time to time.

"There is no service in this war of our own country and our allies in which the women of the country can so well enlist themselves as in this one," says Mr. Hoover, "and the success of the food administration will rest very largely upon the support we receive from them."

In one of his recent public talks he said further: "I am confident that the whole of this service can be carried out by the men and women of the country on a volunteer basis, and I can see no other means by which the problems can be adequately solved in the United States. My ambition is to see my own people solve their own problem."

There are six general principles which will govern the information to be sent out from the food administration headquarters in Washington. These will have for their object the saving of wheat, the saving of meat, the saving of fats, the saving of food supplies chiefly by the use of perishable substitutes for staples, the saving of transportation, and the saving of all waste by preaching the "gospel of the clean plate," the buying of less foodstuffs, the serving of smaller portions and by other methods set forth.

For the pledge of cooperation with the food administration there is a card insignia to be hung in the window of her home showing the world that she is with the Government in its effort for food conservation. There is also a prescribed kitchen uniform, designed in the office of the Food Administration which she is privileged to wear if so minded. In itself this is a measure of conservation, being neat, practical and inexpensive.
