In the Probate Court of the County of Custer, Idaho

In the matter of the Estate of Edwin R. Stevens, deceased.

It appearing to the satisfaction of the Court from the verified petition of Lydia Ann Stevens, the Executrix of the last will of Edwin R. Stevens, deceased, on file herein, that it would be for the advantage, benefit and best interests of said estate, and those interested therein, to sell the whole of the estate of said deceased.

It is ordered by the Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said Edwin R. Stevens, deceased, appear before the Probate Court of the county of Custer, Idaho, at the court room thereof, in Challis, in said county and there on the 23rd day of April, 1918 at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why an order, as prayed for in the petition, should not be granted to the said Executrix to sell the real estate and personal property used in connection therewith, of the said deceased, at either public or private sale, for the purposes mentioned in the petition, as she shall judge to be for the best interests of said estate and of the parties interested therein;

It is Further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in The Challis Messenger, a newspaper printed and published in said county.

Dated this 3rd day of April, 1918.

HATS AND FACES

By EARL REED SILVERS.

Estelle Williams played with an Ivory paperweight on the mahogany desk of the writing room.

"Harold Smythe is coming to spend the week-end in Glenwood," she informed Dorothy Hunt. "We're going to give a big dance on Saturday evening."

"You are?"
Dorothy showed little interest in the person of Harold Smythe. She had heard so much about him since Estelle's visit to Miami that she had formed an unreasonable dislike for him. But her opinions counted little in the Williams household; she was only the orphan daughter of the sister of Mrs. Williams.

It had been hard for her. Of the same age as Estelle, she was as different from her cousin as black is from white. In the first place, she had big, blue eyes, which gave a hint of pathos, and which made the men who looked at them want to protect her from some harm which they felt was impending. She had skin like the softest velvet, and cheeks the color of a pink rose.

Estelle's eyes were colorless, although she considered them hazel. Her skin, in spite of frequent applications of the latest modern appliances, refused to be anything but rough. But her father was a millionaire, and her mother had social aspirations.

They had met Harold Smythe at Miami, and Harold had casually mentioned the fact that he intended to come East in the summer. An invitation and acceptance had followed, and the time had finally arrived for the much-talked about visit.

On Friday morning Estelle, waiting for the big touring car to carry her to the station to meet the guest, found Dorothy sitting on the front porch.

"Do you wish to ride to town?" she asked graciously.

"Yes, I would like to go." Dorothy arose and took the front seat of the car, while Estelle sat in state in the tonneau. The former wore a sunbonnet of light straw, which had cost 75 cents in the village store; the latter was decked in a silver creation which was purchased in New York for $52.

They reached the station just as the train was pulling out. Estelle leaped from the car and greeted a good-looking, well-set-up young man who was standing on the platform. She did not bother to introduce Dorothy, and the auto started off for the ride to the Williams mansion. The girl in the front seat could hear them chatting noisily. She liked Harold's voice.

When they had reached the house and alighted from the car, however, Estelle paused a moment to introduce the other girl.

"My cousin, Miss Hunt," she said lightly.

The visitor took Dorothy's hand and gazed into her blue eyes. Then he forgot all about his hostess and everything connected with her.

"I didn't know Estelle had a cousin," he gasped. "Will you be here for the week-end?"

"Yes." The one addressed smiled at his evident confusion.

Harold turned to Estelle, who was watching with anxious eyes.

"I think that I shall have a wonderful time," he announced. "Things are just fine here." His eyes returned to Dorothy.

Mrs. Williams came forth and met Harold. When the guest had been shown his room, Estelle called her mother to one side and talked earnestly in guarded tones. Dorothy saw Mrs. Williams nod her head decisively, and then Harold appeared again.

"If you would like to see the place," Estelle suggested, "I will show you around."

"That will be fine." He turned to Dorothy. "You're coming, too, aren't you?" he asked.

"I'm afraid she'll be busy," Estelle interposed. "She's sort of a housekeeper here," she added cruelly. Dorothy's eyes flashed angrily.

"I haven't anything to do," she said, rather defiantly. "I'd love to go."

For the remainder of the morning they explored the beautiful estate. But it proved to be a rather trying time for Estelle. Try as she might, she could not secure the visitor's attention. When she told him of the depth of the shaded lake, he looked into the depths of Dorothy's eyes. So as soon as they returned to the house Estelle held a brief consultation with her mother, and at luncheon Mrs. Williams made an announcement.

"The painters are fixing the cottage at Avon," she said to Dorothy, "and I believe that we ought to have someone there to look over the work. So you will go to the shore this afternoon and stay until Monday."

Dorothy nodded; she saw instantly the plan to get rid of her, but she was helpless. So at two o'clock she started for the shore.

Just one hour later Harold telephoned to New York, leaving the phone with a most dejected look.

"I'm very sorry," he said, "but it will be absolutely necessary for me to go to New York this afternoon."

They protested, but all in vain; and the big touring car arrived at the station in time for the four o'clock train. While Estelle waited outside, Harold walked to the ticket office.

"Give me a single trip ticket to Avon," he said.

"WEARS LIKE IRON" is an old phrase but true. Experience has taught well informed buyers that steel does not compare with high grade iron for heat endurance and general wear.

They also know that high grade iron alloyed with copper as a rust resistant adds tremendously to the service and life of a range. For this reason, only copper alloy iron is used in constructing

COLE'S Down Draft Range

Added to this wonderful advantage, it has more special features of construction than any other moderate priced range on the market. We mention Cole's Hot Blast, money-saving system of combustion—a one-piece non-warping even-quick heating, unbreakable malleable lids (not found in other ranges at this price) and ventilated bracket (insuring greater service).

Cole's Down Draft Range unites the highest quality of material, workmanship and heavy nickel plating into the ideal range for those who are thrifty and economical of fuel.

For low first cost—economy of fuel—long service and handsome appearance—it is an acknowledged leader.

See the name "Cole's Down Draft"—on the high closet door—none genuine without it.
