Snowed In.

The mails of Sunday, Monday Tuesday, and Wednesday, were snowed in between Uniontown and Lewiston, a high wind caused the trouble by drifting the roads full, stopping all traffic for the time being. Up here, all is calm and serene, and we wonder how the snow can drift so as to impede travel.

The year has run its course, the hour glass is running low and soon will cease to percolate through the narrow orifice that is left, emblematic of the near approach of its finality.

The end of the old year, and yet there is no space, no marking of its boundary, no cessation of the swing of the mighty pendulum of time, as it unceasingly passes to and fro, tolling out with its click, click, the onward flow of time that has passed to the great beyond.

The old year will soon have crossed the great divide, and will soon be merged with the things that were, will soon have found the unrecoverable past that has gone before, and has taken with it all the sorrows, the troubles, the heartburnings, the trials, and blighted hopes, the poverty and misery, the fears and disappointments, the privations, the wrongs we have suffered at the hands of false friends, as well as enemies, all the ills that afflicted poor humanity have been buried with the dead old year. Yes the old year will soon have left another mile post on the journey of life, and this world many millions of years old, will soon have had another grain of sand added, will soon have another atom of time, and another swing of the great pendulum placed on the debit side. Another year consigned to a yawning chasm that has entombed millions of years and still there has been no lessening of the vacuity. Old year we chant a requiem over your soon to be dead past, and with all your trials, and troubles, tribulations, and blasted hopes, we tenderly consign you to the oblivion that has been the doom of all your predecessors. Requiescat in pace.

Our Greeting.

ALL HAIL THE NEW YEAR.

We Welcome Thee, New Year.

Another move upon the dial of time, another stroke of the ceaseless pulsation that forces the life-giving current throughout the make-up of nature.

This silent, potent, incomprehensible something, called Time, has added another link to the endless chain of the past, and as it has rung out the changes for the old, it also, with glad acclaim, rings in with merry stroke the dim futurity of the new.

We welcome thee, New Year, and may your bright face be indicative of our happiness whilst thou tarry with us, and may the success that thou shalt usher in, be the precursor of what shall follow in many recurring periods.

We look to thee, oh, New Year, for the fruition of our hopes, and the amplifying of our expectations, and we hope that thou wilt take from our weary hearts the load of care, that thy predecessors have entailed, and in place of thorns be more profuse with roses.

We hope that thy dawning, thy birth, may be fraught with a prophecy of renewed hope, that the sorrows of the poor and afflicted may be turned to joy, that the errors of those that have preceded thee may be corrected, and eliminated from the scroll of time, and that all thy successors may witness the upbuilding, and the establishing of a higher and more ennobling tendency on the part of those who shape the destinies of all things supernal, on the part of those who have not only marked thy coming, but hail thy followers with ever increasing pleasure.

May all nations and peoples discard all the savagery of war with its attendant horrors, and welcome the "White Wings" of peace, and may a higher education apply the test to a higher criticism, and all mankind feel the "Touch of nature, that renders all human kin."

May all religions be centered in the one comprehensive term, Humanitarianism.

We extend a cordial greeting to thee, New Year, and we hope that when thy locks, now of raven hue, become like hoar-frost, and thy sands about run, we can say that we are glad thou came, for the happiness that followed thy advent, and that poor humanity may look with pleasurable anticipation for a glorious period of joy and happiness under thy successor.

May all superstitious dread of an unknowable, and incomprehensible future, be banished from us evermore.

The recipients of success, and that will deal gently with the coming year.

DIED.

Last Saturday, December 19th. The angel of Death called at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mc Kinney at Moore's Ferry on Salmon river and bore away their infant 21 months old.

They are comparatively strangers, having come from Cottage Grove Oregon, last September.

But when we know that the heartbroken mother, in the absence of a minister, gave her own babe a christian burial; reading a chapter from the holy book, and giving a short talk, then we have brought before us, forcibly, the hope and trust which Gods children have in the Giver of all good. The service was made more impressive when the sisters of the babe lifted their voices in song, and when they sang the refrain: "They will meet us at the gates" there was hardly a dry eye, old grey-haired men bowed their heads and wept. While the family deeply mourn their loss, they feel that the little one is safe in the arms of Jesus.

Mr. and Mrs. Mc Kinney have the heartfelt sympathy of all their neighbors in their affliction. Cottonwood Dec. 23d 1895.

Revival services commenced in the Methodist church last evening.
